Historian will talk about race relations

By Alan Madlane

Seems like there's always something else that can be learned about your good old town of Hamtramck.

To illustrate that point, we bring up tomorrow night's rescheduled program at the Hamtramck Historical Museum, titled "What You Didn't Know About African American-Polish American Relations in Hamtramck in the 1920s and 1930s."

It's being presented by Gary Gillette, and if that name sounds at all familiar to you, well, it should: he has been one of the prime figures instrumental in getting the ball rolling, so to speak, on the preservation and renovation of Historic Hamtramck Stadium.

Gillette was able to help procure several large grants, after pushing to get the stadium so-designated, and with that money, the stadium truly has taken on new life.

This talk on African and Polish-Americans will be tomorrow, Saturday, May 16 at 1 p.m. at the museum, 9525 Jos. Campau.

The cost is $5 per person. You may purchase your tickets at the door, or at a link provided on their Facebook page.

Should be interesting.

Counter-protestors scare away Koran book burners

By Charles Sercombe

An anti-Islamic group was late for their Koran burning event, and when they did arrive, they ended up fleeing before ever stepping out of their rented U-Haul.

The Koran is the primary religious text for Islam's estimated two billion followers.

Last Sunday, late afternoon, a group of outside counter-protestors assembled outside a mosque at Caniff and Jos. Campau, and spent hours chanting slogans while they waited for the organization Americans Against Islamification to appear, as threatened.

Chants included: "F—k Nazis," "F—k MAGA," and "Nazi racists go away," among others.

Some also waved the Palestinian flag.

The Koran book burning was scheduled for 5 p.m., but it wasn't until a few hours later when two men, driving a U-Haul truck that was also towing a trailer, showed up.

That's when counter-protestors swiftly gathered around the vehicle, exchanging profanities and banging on the side of the U-Haul truck being driven by the anti-Islamists.

One counter-protestor carried what looked like an assault rifle. Open carry in Michigan is legal.

A heavy police presence from Hamtramck and other agencies quickly swarmed around the protestors to try to prevent an escalation in violence.

When the anti-Islamists sped away, a group of youths and others chased after the vehicle, but not before the anti-Islamists yelled "F—k you" to the counter protestors.

The two anti-Islamists, including driver Jake Lang (a well-known agitator who has been stirring up anti-Islamic rhetoric in the metro area and elsewhere in the country), were later arrested by Dearborn police.

Lang was pulled over and cited for using a cellphone while driving. He was also cited for driving the rental vehi-le while not having permission to do so from the rental company.

Lang was then arrested for possession of psychedelic mushrooms. He denied they belonged to him, instead saying they belonged to his passenger, Jayden Scott, the organizer of the book-burning event.

Scott was also arrested for being wanted on a warrant.

After the pair was released, Lang still attempted to burn Korans in Dearborn, but police officers quickly shut them down.

Both Hamtramck and Dearborn have majority-Muslim populations.

Former mayor Amer Ghalib credited the community for standing up against the anti-Islamic group.

"These uncivilized creatures are like the opportunistic parasites. They can only thrive on hate, division, hostility, and provoking conflict within communities," Ghalib said, in a social media post.

Mayor had green light to open business

By Charles Sercombe

It turns out the outcry over Mayor Adam Alharbi opening his business, Bab Alyemen Shopping Center, at Jos. Campau and Jacob, was all sound and fury, signifying nothing.

(Our apologies to William Shakespeare.)

When the store held a soft opening two weeks ago, critics slammed the mayor for operating a business without a certificate of occupancy.

The problem, it was revealed, was over miscommunication between the city's building department and Alharbi.

So, in other words, the mayor's business was and is legal.

Mayor Alharbi downplayed any controversy caused by the opening of his business.

"We are really proud to have the Bab Alyemen Shopping Center open and serving the community," Alharbi told The Review.

"The city has been helpful throughout the process, and we've worked closely with all the departments to ensure everything was handled the right way for our grand opening.

"Our focus now is strictly on providing a great experience for our customers, and bringing more people to visit Hamtramck. We're glad to be part of the city's growth, and look forward to a successful future here."

Alharbi's business offers a variety of goods, such as clothing, shoes and toys, among several other items.

Although this business is legal, over the years Alharbi has received multiple code violations for various properties, some of which resulted in tickets, and others in warnings.

According to a Freedom of Information Act request by The Review, the violations ranged from grass being too high, issues with dumpsters, alley weeds, issues with trash, litter, not clearing snow and ice, not registering vacant property and so on.

Alharbi ran a campaign promising transparency. He has also urged city officials to cut the red tape in allowing businesses to operate, and generally be more business-friendly.

While it turned out that Alharbi had the green light to open his business, the issue has apparent ly opened a rift with the fire department, and particularly with Fire Marshal Michael Young.

According to a Freedom of Information Act request obtained by The Review, Young took issue with the mayor's handling of the matter, and filed a complaint with the city's Human Resources Department.

In a letter to the department, Young said Alharbi's conduct "raises serious concerns about interference with my official duties, the integrity of fire code enforcement and the potential for retaliation."

Young said that Alharbi threatened him with removal and, even, with being fired.

The fire marshal also took issue with City Manager Adel Al-Adlani's handling of the matter, saying the city manager told him "We need to be flexible on the process to a reasonable level."

That included, Young said, Al-Adlani telling him that "some required steps may be avoided."

"Although that wasn't presented as a direct order," Young said in his letter to the Human Resources Director, Mashana Burton, "it raised concerns that I may be expected to deviate from established fire code requirements."

Young said that the matter also raises the issue of creating a "hostile work environment."

City Manager Al-Adlani denied he made any threats about Young's employment, saying his conversation with him

"was a brief, informal hallway exchange and marked the first time the fire marshal and I had ever met."

Al-Adlani continued:

"I never directed the fire marshal, or anyone else, to ignore fire code requirements. Instead, I noted that reducing downtown vacancy is one of my priorities and emphasized that the city should serve as a constructive partner to businesses working to come into compliance with our codes."

"Helping a business understand and meet code is not the same as never ask a department relaxing code, and I would head to do the latter."

As it turned out, there was nothing stopping Mayor Adam Alharbi from opening his business on Jos. Campau and Jacob despite a false accusation that he did not have proper permits to operate.

In Our Opinion

Let the mayoral election dispute play out

Is Mayor Adam Alharbi still the mayor?

There have been posts on social media suggesting he no longer holds that title because the 37 uncounted ballots from last November election have supposedly been counted.

No, they have not. We won't know the fate of those disputed 37 ballots until the matter winds its way through the court system.

So, to answer the question about Alharbi: Yes, he's still the mayor, despite some wishful thinking by some in the community – namely, his political enemies.

Hamtramck politics and election results have often ended up in controversy and turmoil. This speculation is not surprising.

We know it's been five months since the mayor took office, but the court system doesn't care about time lines. In cases like this, it's frustrating that the wheels of justice grind ever-so slowly.

In the meantime, the city has to carry on. Spreading false information only adds to the confusion and political division in the community.

Get a grip folks, and let the court handle this. In the meantime, city officials can carry on conducting city business.

Oratorical winners celebrate

Retired Hamtramck teacher Rahiel Housey Johnson recently informed of some good news about her students.

Here's what she had to say:

On May 6, winners of the essay and oratorical contests were celebrated by club members and guests at the annual Optimists of Downtown Detroit Law Day and Winners Circle Award Ceremony & Luncheon.

Four Hamtramck Public Schools students participated in the oratorical contest, which was in March.

The results from that event were as follows: first place, Hamtramck High school student Muhsin Alhadi; second place (also from HHS) Nabihah Chowdhury, third place Md. Ezaz Miah from Kosciuszko Middle School; and Dickinson East student Faiza Azrin received an honorable mention. The topic this year is "The Moment I Realized I Belonged – My Definition of Community."

Optimists of Downtown Detroit President Bob Washer welcomed students and their family members, club members, judges, new members and honored guests.

Dave Putt, Optimist Michigan District Governor welcomed contestant Muhsin to the district/state level competition, which will take place at the Kellogg Center in East Lansing on May 16.

Attorney Mark Rossman was the keynote speaker. Oratorical Chairperson Rahiel Housey-Johnson escorted the students to and from their schools and thanked Hamtramck Public Schools teachers Karen Swords, Heather Walsh, Sarah Troxtel, and Kristina Gacesa, for their ongoing support to facilitate their students' participation.

Essay co-chairs Fred Rottach and Jo Darolfi recognized the whopping 130 essay entrants and the judges who pored over them to select the top three from Cass Tech High School; Michelle Compos, Khloe Dixon, and Monreau Hunter.

Congratulations to all who participated and best wishes to all!

HPS summer school

The school year is almost about over, but the Hamtramck Public School District is gearing up for its "Summer Discovery" program.

It starts on June 22 and runs through July 24, and offers activities Monday-Thursday.

Literacy, math and enrichment will be offered from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. It's open to students, Grades 1-10.

A free breakfast and lunch will be provided, as well as bus transportation for some schools.

Odds & Ends

Looking for money ... Recently, City Manager Adel Al-Adlani met with state officials in Lansing to ask for about $2 million to continue the city's alley repaving program.

To be exact, he met with the Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor and Economic Opportunity in the House chamber of the legislature.

For years, Hamtramck streets and alleys went neglected, and it wasn't until about, oh, 15 years ago that the city finally got funding from various sources to begin alley repaving – and, in some cases, totally reconstruct those alleys, including the water/sewer lines underneath.

Al-Adlani presented his case pretty well, in our opinion, telling lawmakers that over 40 percent of Hamtramck's population lives in poverty.

He said that, although he has been city manager for only about three months, "what immediately stood out were our alleys."

He went on to say that Hamtramck is Michigan's "densest city," and, just to be clear, we're pretty sure he wasn't describing the mental acuity of the city council.

We kid. Anyway, he correctly pointed out that "every inch of the city matters."

He went on to say that our alleys are prone to flooding, which at times can then block emergency vehicles from using the alleys.

As everyone learns in this town, our alleys are our life blood.

He also emphasized that the funding needed "is a smart use of our taxpayer money."

Here's hoping that lawmakers can find a little room in the state budget to help out one of their own.

Thanks! ... The city's Beatification Commission has a message for all the volunteers who participated in the recent citywide clean-up effort.

"To all of you that took the time to work with us on beautifying our streets, parks, alleyways and store fronts May 2 – Thank You!

"We of the Beautification Commission look forward to organizing more of these kinds of activities. Stay tuned for more information."

Biking ... Take a unique tour of Hamtramck next Friday (May 22) by joining a community bike ride.

The get-together starts at 5:45 p.m. at Veterans Park, with bikes rolling at 6.

It'll be a 5- to 10-mile ride, lasting about one hour. It's open to those of high-school age and up.

Reminder ... The deadline is nearing for families to sign up their kids for all sorts of activities being sponsored by the Hamtramck Parks and Recreation Department.

For residents, you can sign up online at: <https://shorturl.at/imQ3G>

Non-residents can do in-person registration only until May 18, at the Hamtramck High School Community Center, then online registration after that.

The summer playground program runs June 15-Aug. 18, Monday-Thursday, ages 5-12, 8 a.m.-4:30 p.m. Kids under 5 years old must turn 5 by June 25.

Open meetings? ... City Councilmember Mohammed Hassan has been in office for about 16 years. He is the most experienced member of the city council.

You would think that, during this time, he'd have learned something about the rules of the state's Open Meetings Act (OMA).

Ah, but this past Tuesday's council meeting showed us something different. Namely, Hassan, out of the blue, asked for a closed meeting to discuss "city business."

That reason is way too broad to satisfy anything allowed by the state's

OMA. The rules call for any closed meeting to be about something specific, such as a pending lawsuit.

City Attorney Odey Neroueh saved the moment by saying he had an update on a pending lawsuit filed by former city manager Max Garbarino.

But one can't help wondering what other issues were discussed.

Mayor Adam Alharbi has called for transparency in city government, but Hassan's request flies in the face of that.

Come on, councilman, learn the rules of the road when it comes to conducting the business of the public. In fact, it would likely be a good idea if the entire council – and mayor – review the OMA rules.

Good goods for sale ...

Agency offers mental health support to new mothers

James E. White,
President and CEO

The Detroit Wayne Integrated Health Network (DWIHN) knows that one of the greatest joys in life is bringing a child into this world, but it can also be a very scary time too.

Mothers manage a myriad of health concerns while bringing a healthy baby into the world, and that process can often feel overwhelming. That's why DWIHN is working to help support moms by partnering with the Southeastern Michigan Perinatal Quality Improvement Coalition (SEMPQIC).

The initiative, funded by SEMQIC, trains clinicians within the DWIHN network to help them identify mothers who may be struggling with Postpartum Depression (PPD). The training includes a new and enhanced screening process to catch early signs and symptoms of PPD.

With this initiative, DWIHN is expanding access to care to support families dealing with PPD.

We know mothers are impacted emotionally, physically, and mentally during this time and detecting the signs early is one more way to protect mom and baby.

Every year, nearly 800,000 mothers struggle with PPD, including 16% of mothers in Michigan, according to the 2023 Health of Women and Children Report. Symptoms include ongoing feelings of anxiety, irritability, and even guilt.

Some physical issues mothers may experience include changes in appetite, weight, or sleep patterns.

This initiative gives DWIHN the opportunity to raise awareness of PPD, foster conversations that are often avoided, and offer solutions. The new approach is designed to detect PPD earlier and provide specialized care. Programming also will provide critical tools to fathers and other individuals in the mother's circle of support.

HAMTRAMCK
HISTORICAL MUSEUM

MUSEUM LECTURE SERIES
"What You Didn't Know About
African American-Polish American Relations in Hamtramck in the 1920s and 1930s."
with Gary Gillette

While not a racial utopia, Hamtramck was a very progressive city in terms of race relations. The original Hamtramck village council and the first city council both included Black council members. African Americans could own their own houses in the city and Hamtramck Public Schools were integrated (both unlike Detroit). This talk will focus on the African American-Polish American cooperation and civil rights actions in Hamtramck in the 1920s and 1930s.
