St. Lads parishioners take a stand against a likely sale of their church

By Charles Sercomb x

Two years ago it was announced that St. Ladislaus Church would be closing. That turned out to be premature.

But now it appears that day may come. Last Sunday about 40 parishioners demonstrated in front of the church over what might be an impending closing.

Protest organizer Walter Bankowski said the parish council recently voted to close the church. The plan would be for the parish to merge with Transfiguration Church in Detroit.

Both churches are part of what's called the Pope John Paul II Parish. Fr. Andrew Wesley, who is the head of the combined parish, did not return a call for comment.

Bankowski said a decision on whether to close the church will be made by the Detroit Archdiocese in the coming weeks. The parish council vote, he stressed, was only an advisory vote.

Despite that vote, which was a close one, Bankowski said the church is on solid financial ground. “This is a financially viable church,” he said.

There are about 200 parishioners here.

Bankowski said that St. Lad's parishioners won't likely transfer to Transfiguration and instead will go to Queen of Apostles or St. Florian, both of which are in Hamtramck.

Adventures close to home

(Editor's note: City Life is a column about walkable discovery in Hamtramck.)

By Walter Wasacz

A few weeks ago I stopped into the Hamtramck Historical Museum for a chat with its director, Greg Kowalski. We talked mostly about an exhibition we are working on for the end of summer and early fall devoted to local music.

But something else struck me during our conversation. While we were talking about places where some music events took place here in the 1970s — when Greg and I were then young men living in different corners of the city — he said he didn't venture over to the side of town where much of this action was.

He had not heard of the Misty Inn or the creative music scene that it spawned. My guess is that it isn't so much because Greg was not necessarily a fan of Hamtramck rock 'n' roll, but that he was a southender and the bar was on the northend (yes, that's how we spell it, as one compound word) on Jos. Campau near Commor.

His family lived on Wyandotte, which stretched from

Jos. Campau to Lumpkin in those days. This was before the Hamtramck Town Center was built, sadly destroying the integrity of the commercial street wall south of Holbrook.

My family lived on Edwin at Gallagher, roughly 12 blocks from the Kowalskis. It wasn't the northend; it was almost perfectly central. I grew up with a kind of geographic elasticity, comfortable moving around the city in any direction on foot or bicycle.

As a kid, I bowled at Playdium, at the corner of Jos. Campau and Faber, and played baseball at Veterans and Playfair parks on the southend. I also bowled occasionally at North End Recreation (yes, that’s how they spelled it), in a building on Jos. Campau south of Carpenter. The building was demolished decades ago (as was Playdium, but more recently, in the 1990s). It was located roughly where the Hamtramck Woody Plaza is now. The plaza, which houses Michigan Health and Human Services offices, is named for the late Woodrow W. Woody, a beloved car dealer who sold Pontiacs on that site (and in still viewable commercials you can find on YouTube), in a building that also no longer exists, from 1940 until he retired in 2000. Woody was 94 when he died in 2002. At age 11 and 12, I would ride my bike to the edges of Hamtramck’s city limits, to borders on the east, north and south and west — once, I remember crossing Dequindre at Caniff before I-75 was built and then riding down to Russell, which once extended from Eastern Market to Holbrook as a busy secondary thoroughfare. This was before the freeway dig began in the mid-1960s, effectively neutering both Dequindre and Russell, turning them into something one-dimensionally modern: service drives.

Another time I remember riding my bike out of the city to the east side, finding myself lost somewhere on Gratiot near Van Dyke. I was miles from home, the neighborhoods were unfamiliar, but I was confident I could find my way back.

My confidence came from maps, which I would pore over nearly every day, and from my father, who taught me a lesson I’ve never lost: always know where you are and where you’re going. I keep that one close and apply it today in so many ways. My current walking adventures are inspired by memories such as these. Last week, I took a hike to a part of town I have not been to in some time. On a sunny afternoon I headed south on Conant under the viaduct and past the former Missant building — once home to the Olsonite Corporation, a manufacturer that was an innovator in something we now take for granted: plastic toilet seats.

Just beyond the sprawling vacant grounds that hug the Canadian National Railway (formerly the Grand Trunk Western) I turned and headed west on Missant St., also known Robert W. Kozaren Dr., so named for the city’s longest serving mayor (1980-1997).

This street has had several names.

The first time I saw it in the 1960s it was Miller, which continues under that name on the opposite side of Conant. Well before that it was called Leuschner.

Both names evoke Hamtramck Township’s German-dominated 19th century. There was once an interesting residential community tucked away off Miller west of Conant. Three short dead end streets — Manhattan, Rockwood and Butler — always fascinated me. Who lived there, I wondered. Who still alive has memories of houses on Manhattan St.?

I continued on. The hulking county jail, the Dickerson facility, was to my left. The fenced, vacant property to my right, between the street and the railroad tracks, was even more curious. Who owns that, I wondered, and if remediated what can it become in the future?

Moving onto Denton St. and toward Jos. Campau, memories flashed of large buildings that once existed on this land. I remembered the Polar Brand ice cream company and Ida Windows, both lost to dramatic fires in the 1970s and 1980s. I recalled how McDougall St., now erased from this old neighborhood, once connected Miller and Denton.

I paused at the viaduct at Jos. Campau. Dodge Main once loomed tall to my left.

The Mistele Coal yard was directly ahead. Heading north, I walked into the tunnel beneath the tracks, head full with snapshots taken from personal history, stretching back years and years. I was excited to see them again so vividly. More adventures are sure to come I was thinking as I headed up the sidewalk under the bridge and back into the light.

Walter Wasacz spends most of his time walking, reminiscing and writing in Hamtramck, where he was born and still lives.

City will be hearing property assessment challenges

By Charles Sercombe
Hamtramck is cracking down on claims of financial hardship when it comes to appealing the value of your house. City Assessor Jay Singh said that for a number of years some homeowners have been claiming they are too poor to pay their property taxes during the annual Assessment Board of Appeals. Before Singh took over the job as assessor a few years ago they were granted that exemption for several years running, he said, which is not allowed by law. That's about to change.

Police patrol cars will be outfitted with new cameras

By Charles Sercombe
Hamtramck's police patrol cars will be outfitted with new dashboard cameras, thanks to a state grant. Gov. Rick Snyder recently announced public safety grants he awarded to several "distressed" communities in the state. Hamtramck will receive $90,000 to purchase patrol car cameras. Police Chief Anne Moise said the grant came just in time. "The current cameras are out of date," she said. There are now 10 patrol cars with cameras, but Moise said she did not know how many cameras the grant will cover. She added that the department does not have on-body cameras for officers nor is she is a rush to get them. "There are some privacy issues that need to be worked out," she said. In total, the state gave $5.4 million to 11 communities. "The municipalities that applied for and have now been approved for this special funding are among those that have faced significant financial challenges in recent years," Snyder said in a press release. "These grants will go a long way to ensure these cities can improve the public services their residents expect and deserve." The City of Flint received the highest award, $2 million, for reconnection to the Detroit water system.

The city council recently adopted the federal guidelines of what's considered to be in poverty. Plus, if a homeowner meets that threshold, the maximum they can receive that claim is three years, Singh said. But it gets even tougher. Singh says he reviews all income tax returns to verify claims of poverty. Guess what? Things aren't what they always seem to be. "Often I find their tax return is wrong," he said. If the tax return holds up, the next process is to fill out an eight-page form. Homeowners not claiming a poverty exemption are also invited to challenge the city's property assessment. The March Board of Review will be held on March 14, 9 a.m.-4 p.m.; March 16, 9 a.m.-5p.m.; and March 18, 12:30-7:30 p.m. You must make an appointment by calling (313) 876-7700, extension 319, or my mail to city hall. The deadline to make an appointment is March 11.

That means it’s likely Transfiguration will face being closed in the near future.

The closing of St. Lads would likely lead to the Archdiocese selling the building. The parish previously sold its school building to a charter school. Bankowski said the building sold for $500,000, but none of that money went to the parish.

St. Lads was built in 1952 at a time when Hamtramck’s population was about 50,000. Since then the city’s population has declined to about half that, although in recent years there has been a slight uptick.

But Hamtramck’s newest surge of residents are of the Muslim faith. It is commonly thought that the church would be sold and repurposed into a mosque.

In Our Opinion

School board residency issue will have its day in court

We knew this was coming. Former School Board-member Mohammad Huda has filed a lawsuit against the board for declaring his seat vacant. The board started an investigation into Huda's actual residency last year after evidence indicated he was really living in Warren with his wife and kids. Several weeks ago the board followed the advice of the Attorney General's Office and declared Huda's seat vacant on the theory that since it was believed there was solid evidence showing Huda was a non-resident his seat on the board was automatically vacant. All the board had to do was vote on it. Huda was not present at the meeting when that vote was taken. Through the investigation and the presentation of what was found by a private investigator, Huda sat and remained silent. That is his right, but it was curious: He didn't say a word in his defense or even offer a protest. Huda has a history of moving in and out of the city in the course of a few years. A few months before running for school board he claimed to have moved from Warren to Hamtramck, despite his house in Warren enjoying a 100-percent Homestead tax exemption. That exemption is reserved for only those who reside in the house that receive such an exemption. There are other pieces of information that leads one to think Huda is not a resident. Some say the district is going to waste money on defending its position. While we think Huda has every right to his day in court, we think it is equally important for the district to defend the integrity of public office. Huda is not alone when it comes to a local elected official who are believed to really live outside of Hamtramck. Maybe this case will put an end to those who think Hamtramck is nothing more than a political playfield.

Odds & Ends

Correction... In last week's issue we incorrectly reported that newly-appointed School Boardmember Salah Hadwan has six children. Mr. Hadwan apologized to The Review for misunderstanding a reporter's question. He does not have any children.

New in town... Last week was the soft opening of Hamtramck's newest bar, Trixie's. The bar is located on Carpenter where the former Turtle and Inky's had been operating. The new owners are Ian and Andrew Perrotta. Review readers will recognize Ian as the copy editor for The Review, and he is also a member of Hamtramck's City Council. The brothers did a great job in fixing and cleaning up the bar, plus they also built an amazing stage. The bar will be fully open for the Hamtramck Music Festival next week, and plans are for regular live bands there.

A Polish American contribution to the struggle against slavery

By Thaddeus C. Radzilowski, Ph.D.

The statue of Thaddeus Kosciuszko sits, largely unnoticed, on Michigan Ave in Detroit, across from the MGM Casino. February marks his birthday. It is also Black History month when we honor the contributions of African Americans and those who fought for justice for them. It is a fortuitous conjunction. No one hated slavery and inequality more than Kosciuszko and few in that American Revolutionary generation raised that issue as graphically as he did. He devoted his life to the struggle for liberty on two continents. Kosciuszko's friend Thomas Jefferson (whom Kosciuszko advised to free his own slaves) called him "as pure a son of liberty as I have ever known and of that liberty which is to go to all and not to the few or the rich". Kosciuszko's love of liberty and hatred of servitude was not theoretical or abstract. He lived it. His friend and aide-de-camp was a free Black named Agrippa Hall. After the Revolution, he invited Hall to come to Poland with him, but Hall decided to stay in America. When Kosciuszko returned to America from Russian captivity, wounded and debilitated, one of his first acts was to make a difficult journey to visit Hall, his former comrade in Arms. On one occasion, during the Revolutionary War, he admonished fellow officers who wanted to divide up the fine clothing of an officer who had been killed, to give them instead to the man's two slaves who had followed their master to war. They were not only in need, he said, but "their skin can bear, as well as ours, good things". Unable to comprehend how Americans who had launched so noble an experiment in liberty as the new Republic could countenance a hideous institution like slavery, Kosciuszko advised Thomas Jefferson, the executor of his American will, to sell the land that Congress had given him in lieu of salary and use the money to free and educate slaves. In his awkward English he wrote with great sincerity: "I beg Mr. Jefferson that in case I should die without will or testament he should by out of my money so many Negroes and free them that the remaining sum should be sufficient to give them education and provide for their maintenance. That is to say each should know, the duty of a citizen in the free Government, that he must defend his Country against foreign as well internal Enemies who would wish to change the Constitution for the worst to enslave them by degree afterwards, to have good and human heart sensible for the suffering of others, each must be married and have 100 acres of land, with instruments, Cattle for tillage and know how to manage and govern it as well to know how to behave to neighbours, always with kindness and ready to help them – to themselves frugal, to their children give good education I mean as to the heart and the duty to the Country, in gratitude to me to make themselves happy as possible."

Later, Jefferson would help him turn it into a formal, legal will with the same sentiments. Unfortunately, because of obstructions, embezzlement, a desire to change provisions and other claims the will was never carried out but its appearance in the Courts for decades, kept alive Kosciuszko's view of the evil of slavery as a blot on the republic he had fought so unselfishly for seven years to create. Kosciuszko's was one of our first abolitionists. For that alone he deserves to be remembered especially at this time.

MORRIS

 Werdon "Butch" Morris, age 59, passed away at home February 12, 2016, in Detroit, of long fought heart failure. He was in his beloved wife's arms. He was survived by his children, Steven and Belinda; two sons (Butch so loved his grands), Gabriel and Stefan; his siblings, Margaret, Bud and Timothy, and living on forever in the heart of his wife Theresa.

Butch was born on August 16, 1956 in Kalamazoo, MI to Werdon and Margaret Morris. He married his soul mate Theresa (Wilmoth) June 15, 1986, who will celebrate 30 years of marriage this June to the husband who truly loved her heart and her spirit.

Butch served America in the Navy during tumultuous times in the early 1970s. He attended and graduated from Grayling High School class of 1975. He then went on to college at Kirtland CC in Roscommon, MI studying Automotive and Computer technology.

He was also a self taught man who did not have trouble learning and adapting to new things. If you needed to know about how to do something call Butch he had probably done it already. His work after the Navy was varied and interesting but most of all he enjoyed a long career as an Auto Recovery Technician, a sometimes dangerous job fit for the brave man that we knew fondly as Butch.

He would come to the rescue of many people who crossed his path and did not think about what could happen to him but what he can stop from happening to others. He was a hero. He had a wide array of interests and hobbies. Butch liked fishing, exotic pets, building scale models and his unique garden. For those who knew him well you got to see his many collectibles (and what really cool collections he had) and hobbies that his children Steven and Belinda could share and appreciate and will carry on after him.

He was rarely seen without a cigarette. And the first impression he made was always one of a kind.

His wife Theresa was his perfect match. If you knew them as a couple you knew what a real husband and wife should have. They accepted and loved each other deeply and with no requests to change or conditions. He was proud until his last breath to have a wife that walked straight out of his dreams or off the pages of a girly magazine.

He was sarcastic and optimistic and could find humor in the darkest of places. He was NOT a leg man, and his wife Theresa obliged, and I am not talking chicken. If there was a photo of a pretty woman in a bikini he liked it but always held them up to the real thing he had at home and found them all fall short.

For his birthday or father's day take him out to Hooters. You would be guaranteed a memorable day in an environment where he sparkled. Double entendre and risky innuendo were his sense of humor at rest. His jokes, when on a roll, would make you blush and laugh out loud. He was shameless and you could not help but love him for it.

In support of his personality I include these little fun facts as he would appreciate the looks on people's faces as they read them.

He follows his son Christopher and daughter Tiffany into the next adventure. Meeting his brother Curtis at a stream, where the fishing could not be better. Now they walk together in greener pastures. And God watches over him until we can meet him again. Psalm 23:2

Visitation was Tuesday at Jurkiewicz & Wilk Funeral Home. Visit his memorial page at facebook.com/Werdon-ButchMorris2016/.
