HAMTRAMCK'S NEWSPAPER OF RECORD

Quick Hits

Happy Fourth of July! This Saturday is our national celebration of independence. In Hamtramck, the freedoms we as Americans enjoy are keenly felt by the many immigrants who have made arduous journeys to come here and be free.

Many of us will be hosting barbecues and displaying the American flag.

Many will also be shooting off fireworks. While they are now legal in Michigan, we urge our readers to take extra caution when handling them, especially when you consider how close our houses are and the number of children running around.

Celebrate everyone!

City park renovation kicks off next week with ceremony

By Charles Sercombe

Hamtramck's parks are about to get a total makeover.

A few months ago it was announced that there will be major improvements to the city's three parks: Veterans Memorial Park, Pope Park and Zussman Park.

The city is now ready to kick off the work, which will cost a total of $500,000, with two groundbreaking ceremonies.

The first is next Wednesday, July 8, 10 a.m., at Pope Park, loand Belmont. After that funds, Wayne County opening, another ceremony will take place at Zussman Park, which is located across from city

Then on July 14 at 10 a.m., Veterans Park will be the center of attention. That park is located on Jos. Campau, south of Holbrook.

Invited guests include elected and appointed officials from Hamtramck, Wayne County and the state. Residents, of course, are welcomed to attend.

Funding for the park renovations comes from Community Development cated at Jos. Campau Block Grants (CDBG)

Assault victims question behavior of off-duty Hamtramck police officers

The officers were not directly involved in the fight and are not facing criminal charges. The Review is withholding their names because no charges are pending nor is there a civil lawsuit.

Election season heats up

By Charles Sercombe

It's officially an election season.

How can we tell?

Technically it starts when the filing deadline has passed to run for office.

But it really starts when things heat up and a candidate has reported either the theft of or damage to their campaign signs. We now have a victim: Saad Almasmari, who is one of nine candidates vying for one of three seats on city council.

He reported that about 40 of his signs were spray-painted with a large "X" through his name.

Almasmari has this to say to whoever is responsible for the damage:

"If you don't want me to run and win, stand against me legally by being my election competitor. Or support any other candidate against me. Or you would have come to me and tell me what you don't like about my plan and thoughts. Come and have conversations with me. I'm ready to answer all your questions and

City park renovation kicks off next week with ceremony

Parks millage funds, the Karol Wojtyla Parks Committee, a non-profit group dedicated to the renovation of Pope Park, and the Michigan Economic Development Corporation Patronicity crowdfunding campaign.

So, what's in the works?

There are two common threads in all of the parks: more greenery in the form of trees, bushes and flowers, and new lighting.

Let's go park by park.

Pope Park at Jos. Campau and Belmont, which boasts a monument to the late Pope John Paul II - the first-ever Polishborn pope – will have the iron gating ripped out and reused in Veterans Memorial Park.

The brick pavement will also be removed and replaced with a stamped brick pattern. Look for more trees and a lot more benches. The park's mural will also be cleaned up.

New lighting will be added, making this a destination spot during the day and night.

Zussman Park, which is located across from city hall, will get a dramatic new look featuring amphitheater seating and a pergola-like structure, all tailor-made to host special events and weddings.

Phone (313) 874-2100

The center of the park will be replaced with new concrete work and two additional walkways will be added. Parking will also be increased with the addition of angle parking spaces that will cut a little into the park.

The monument to Lt. Raymond Zussman, who was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor for his heroics in World War II, will be moved to the main entrance of the park and elevated.

New lighting will also be installed.

Plans for the city's third park, Veterans Memorial, are the most ambitious. It will be good news for families and kids.

Starting at the front, the gating around the memorial will be removed, but iron gating from Pope Park will be repurposed and placed in the front of the park.

The fencing will be interspersed with bushes to create an attractive front, but still low enough for police to monitor the goings-on inside park.

Just past the monument there will be a play area with new play equipment and fitness stations for adults. On the south side of the park. along the edge and continuing around the bend will be beds of wild flow-concerns."

This election season has been otherwise lowkey and calm. Unlike previous years, there has been no candidate forum for candidates to meet the public and discuss their plans.

But on a number of Facebook pages of the candidates, they appear to be doing a lot of doorto-door campaigning.

There have also been about 400 applications submitted for absentee ballots, which appears to be a new strategy by candidates in recent years to get more voters to vote, and vote early.

For those who are not registered to vote, you have until July 6 to do so in order to participate in the Aug. 4 Primary Elec-

The election features three incumbents seeking re-election: Robert Zwolak, Anam Miah and Abu Musa.

Their challengers, besides Almasmari, include: Frank Woodman, Monzurul Karim. Mohamed Alsomiri, Susan Dunn and Cathie Gordon.

In the Aug. 4 election, three candidates for council will be eliminated and the remaining six candidates will squareoff in the November General Election.

The Primary Election also includes a public school millage renewal. The renewal is for 18 mills, which has been in place for 20 years. It produces over $1.8 million a vear for the school dis-

Recreation Department will host another fireworks show

By Charles Sercombe

A fireworks show will once again return to Hamtramck.

But it's not going to be this July Fourth weekend. Instead, the Hamtramck Recreation Department, which sponsoring the event, will hold its own show on July 25 at Keyworth Stadium.

Last year Hamtramck was treated to a free fireworks show by a cable television company as part of a nationwide contest. The event was so popular that the Recreation Department, which is part of the public schools, decided to keep the show going.

Fireworks will return later this month in Hamtramck, on July 25 at Keyworth Stadium, thanks to the public school district's Recreation Department.

munities hosting fireworks this weekend.

"We wanted to be the only game in town, to stand out," Daniels said. Last year's theme was

"Red, White and You." This year it's: "Celebrate America in Hamtramck."

"It's a celebration of city's diversity," Daniels said.

The event goes from 6 to 10 p.m. with fireworks going off near 10 p.m.

In addition to the main attraction, the event will be geared toward families, with bounce houses, petting farm, pony rides and face paintings. Food will be sold by the Athletic Department to raise funds for its activities.

No coolers will be allowed on site.

There will also be several local music acts.

Latest trend in street robberies is all about cell phones

By Charles Sercombe

If you tend to talk on your cell phone as you walk around town, you might want to hold off.

In recent weeks Hamtramck police – and police nationwide -- have reported a spike in the number of street robberies of high-end cell phones.

"Right now, it's an epidemic everywhere," said Sgt. Andrew Mileski. "People need to pay attention to their surroundings." Most of the incidents involve young men, some even in their teens, who come up on a person talking on their phone and quickly snatch it, then run away, sometimes to a waiting car.

In prior years most street robberies involved yanking off gold necklaces from pedestrians.

That has just about disappeared, and is replaced with cell phone thefts. Mileski said the phones get more money than jew-

In some of the more brazen cases, thieves will enter a store and steal display models.

While it is possible to track where the phones go, they must remain on to do so. Mileski said thieves turn off the phones and have the information card in it erased, thus making it untraceable.

Some of the higher end phones sell for upwards of $600 new.

Mileski said there have been some arrests made, but if it involves a juvenile, they are likely to be released to their parents or parent with little legal backlash.

In some cases there are groups of thieves coordinating the thefts and in other cases it's just a matter of an individual quest to Acting Police Chief Anne Moise, for their version of events, but we were told by City Manager Katrina Powell that our request for comment would not be passed on to the officers.

Assault victims question behavior of off-duty Hamtramck police officers

Powell added that since there will be further legal action the officers are not allowed to comment on the matter.

One woman who assaulted the two victims has been convicted and is awaiting sentencing. Although the woman was charged with a misdemeanor, because it was an aggravated assault her sentence could be as much as one year in

Two other women involved in the matter cannot be found but have outstanding warrants for their arrest.

The two victims, Vivian Arapaj and Maria Olivan, provided The Review with statements about what happened on the night of Aug. 22, 2014 at a bar called The Tin Fish in St. Clair

Here is their account of what happened that night:

Shores.

They were at the bar celebrating a friend's birthday when one of the officers insisted they have a shot with him. They declined, and that's when things got testy.

The officer picked up Vivian and sat her on top of the bar, insisting she nave a snot.

A male friend of the pair told the officer to back off. The officer responded with a threat: "I'm going to kick your f ass."

said: "Do you even know who I am and what I can do to you?"

A scuffle ensued with a bartender who intervened, and that's when the women left with their friends.

bitch." And then suddenly a group of women at- n't comment on this spetacked the two victims, kicking their heads and pulling their hair. the suspects fled. However, someone took a photo of the license

One of the officers ended up cooperating with St. Clair Shores police and identified the women who committed the assault.

The victims both asked Hamtramck's Police Department to look into the matter.

Former Police Chief Max Garbarino told The Review he assigned an investigator to look into the matter, and as a result of that felt there was no need to take disciplinary action.

However, Maria Olivan said no one from Hamtramck ever contacted her to talk about the incident despite several pleas, including one to City Manager Powell.

She said that although she is frustrated by Hamtramck's response, she is not surprised.

"I thought to myself, they're living up to the reputation they have as a department," Olivan said. "It's a department that doesn't care and is corrupt."

Olivan said that although the officers didn't commit the assault, they added to the tension and "egged on" the assault. For that reason, she said, the department should have taken disciplinary action.

"Officers are held to a higher standard. I definitely feel they took advantage of situation," Olivan said.

St. Clair Shores Sgt. Jay Cohoe, who handled the matter, said because the officers were not directly involved in the assault, they were not charged.

However, he conceded that: "This was no ordi-The officer further nary bar fight. It's unfortunate the officers didn't act accordingly."

> The incident raises the question: Should the officers have intervened when members of their group assaulted the two women?

It's a trickier question

The Review talked with Erick Barnes, an instructor of criminal justice at One of the officers University of Detroit Mercy, about the responsibilities of an officer who sees a crime unfold in front of him or her.

Although Barnes couldcific matter, he said there are many factors to take into account, and Police were called but that depends a lot on an officer's training and experience. For starters, when an as a shooting, an offduty officer "has a legal obligation to take action," Barnes said, but to what extent is still open to interpretation.

It could mean taking out his gun, calling local police or simply coming forward as a witness.

The incident in this matter was a misdemeanor.

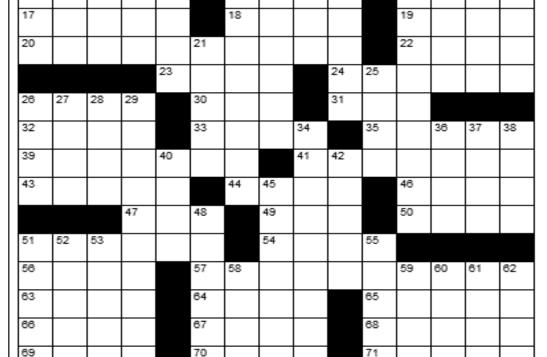

Often, Barnes said, it's a split-second call.

"Most individuals would agree that a certain legal duty is reguired when a crime happens in their presence," Barnes said. "Hindsight is 20-20."

But a major mitigating factor is the recent attention on police behavior and the allegations of police brutality. That, Barnes said, has a "chilling effect" on officers getting involved in a situation when off-duty.

Former Hamtramck Police Chief Garbarino said that given the specifics of this matter, the offishould stepped forward and held back their friends.

"That's common sense," Garbarino said.

Hamtramck's basement flooding is well known, and after two major floodings homeowners filed a class action lawsuit against the city to force the issue.

Because of that case,

Like it or not, we have the court has ordered larger system that runs the city to begin making repairs. But since the city doesn't have millions of dollars on hand, onto our water bills in it has to pass on the cost to us.

Our sewer system is old and breaking down. It should have also been connected to a much Voters had a chance to connect with that sewer line back in the 1950s but foolishly rejected it.

We have suffered the consequences of that action for decades.

It will cost us more money in the near future, but in the long run it will be money well spent.

Odds & Ends

Correction... Last week it was incorrectly reported that the public school district is seeking a renewal of a millage worth 10 mills. The correct amount is 18 mills, which has been in place for 20 years. The ballot issue will be presented to voters on Aug. 4.

The DDA passed out dozens of watering cans to businesses to encourage them to maintain the flower boxes.

Update... Some of you probably noticed that Jos. Campau wasn't fully reopened last Friday as scheduled.

That's because a portion of the street that was dug up wasn't ready for traffic. The Detroit Water Department spent the week fixing a water leak at Campau and Trowbridge.

Part of the repair required making sure the new asphalt used to patch the street would be able to support the weight of trucks. Well, it didn't pass the first road test, but it did on Wednesday.

We can't say what specifically will be discussed, but it will be a meeting worth attending.

The meeting starts at 6:30 p.m. and is held at the Administrative Building, on Roosevelt next to Keyworth Stadium.

Hamtramck can boast of having happy feet, according to report

By Mike Murphy The Review special writer

There's good news and bad when it comes to Hamtramck, according to a recent George Washington University School of Business report on Michigan metropolitan areas and "walkability," which the authors of the report describe as much more than the ability to get around town on foot.

In terms of hoofing it in Hamtramck and its affordability the city ranks high among communities in Michigan metropolitan areas, but walking to work is another story, said Patrick Lynch, who co-authored "The WalkUp Wake-Up Call: Michigan Metros" along with GWU business professor Christopher B. Leinberger.

Leinberger and Lynch have also created reports on walkability factors in the metropolitian areas of Boston, Atlanta, and Washington D.C. The gist of the reports is that walkabilty factors add value to cities, and Boston is leading the way in the United States.

On the whole, though, the Michigan Metropolitan areas are leaps and bounds ahead of their late 20th Century selves when it comes to improving these factors, which are based on the "economic performance" and "social equity" of cities.

The seven metro areas included in the report were Detroit-Ann Arbor; Grand Rapids-Muskegon-Holland; Lansing; Jackson; Kalamazoo- Battle Creek; Saginaw-Bay City-Midland; and Flint, which are all on the comeback trail, according to the report.

"They can all point to examples of walkable urban places in their communities that have seen at least some form of investment and activity that 15 years ago would have been almost unimaginable," the report says.

According to Lynch, the social equity of a municipality is based on two criteria: access to jobs versus affordability.

The Economic Performance category takes account of real estate values and the average rent for each community, which the report classifies as Michigan communities and its low-density commercial areas drag down its overall rating.

Lynch said Hamtramck's abundance of single-family and two-family houses and its mostly one-to-two story commercial strips skew the overall walkability rating and keep real estate values relatively low.

A recent report gave Hamtramck high marks for being a walkable community.

"Walk Ups."

Lynch said Hamtramck residents and businesses share the benefits of relatively low rents and residents and those who work in Hamtramck can generally walk to shops and restaurants.

"Hamtramck ranks above average in affordability," Lynch said.

However, Hamtramck's corresponding lack of employment opportunities which it shares with many

"One of the reasons is that there is not a whole lot of density," Lynch said. "Most of the commercial space is single story and not incredibly dense. To get high rents you need more density."

In terms of economic performance, Hamtramck received a copper ranking (behind gold and silver rankings) in the report, which rated Hamtramck as silver in terms of its social equity.

What is our City Council up to these days? We have the highlights of the latest council meeting.

By Charles Sercombe

The city council met on June 9, and all councilmembers, except Abu Musa, were present. Before the regular council meeting a work session was held.

A discussion was held on the 2015-16 budget set for the city. The budget was put together by former Emergency Manager Cathy Square. Her amended budget was going to have to be adopted by the council. Councilmember Titus Walters questioned how the city's finances were "looking."

City Controller Bhama Cairns said that overall the general fund is OK but other areas in the budget will have to be adjusted.

Councilmember Mohammed Hassan questioned why the council has to adopt the budget since it was created by Emergency Manager Square.

City Manager Katrina Powell said this is what the state Treasury Department wants.

Hassan said he might disagree with the budget plan. In response, Councilmember Anam Miah said, "You could bet it wouldn't make a difference."

Powell said that she will have budget workshops to plan for next year's budget.

Hassan said the city can't afford pension payments nor a full-time Fire Department. He said the city needs to consolidate, and that he won't

The lore of Hamtramck ...

Home – not so sweet – home

By Greg Kowalski

Homelessness is not a new issue. The poor, the displaced, the troubled have always been with us.

Hamtramckans added a different twist to that story, however, in the wake of World War II.

The city was packed solid with people. Soldiers were returning from the war and starting new families. It became hard to even find a flat to rent. Some enterprising Hamtramckans found an alternative.

Going back to the early part of the 20th century, when Hamtramck's population exploded with the immigrants, thousands of people registered to vote.

Finding a place for everyone to cast ballots became an issue, so the city responded by having a series of "voting shacks" built. These were simple one-story buildings, each about eight feet by 10 feet where people could cast their ballots in relative comfort. At least they were out of the open air.

The shacks were just that. They had no amenities whatsoever. No toilets, no water, and heat was provided by a potbellied stove. They were stored at the DPW yards by Keyworth Stadium when not in use, and towed to various sites around the city for elections.

In late 1948 four families with no place else to go took up residence in the shacks. They were given unofficial permission to use the small buildings by DPW Director George Banish, who took pity on their plight.

City officials looked the other way and everyone lived in harmony, at least for a while.

But a problem arose in early February, 1949,

The city welfare department stepped in and tried to locate a rental for the family, but found little success. Part of that seemed to be due to the Grzelbyks, who didn't seem responsive to any help.

Finally, they city turned Hamtramck's old voting shacks became residences for some.

when officials realized that an election was coming up on the 21st of the month and the shacks would be needed for voting. The city had the right to evict the families, but that wouldn't look good to the public, especially in the depths of winter.

The problem was es- from the scene. pecially acute with the Grzelbyk family – mom, dad, and two kids - who resided in a shack that had been placed at Commor and Mackay.

The shacks at the DPW yard at least had access to the bathroom in the nearby DPW garage, but there were no other facilities available near that shack. Exactly what the family did in regards to that is not recorded.

to the court, citing that the shack was an unhealthy place to try to raise kids. Judge Thaddeus Machrowicz signed an order to have the parents evicted and the children placed in a "public institution."

Shortly thereafter the parents disappeared

But the election did go on successfully. There's no record of what happened to the other fami-And lies. Hamtramck's population declined in subsequent years, the need for voting shacks faded too. By 1970 all the shacks were decommissioned as people cast their ballots in a variety of existing buildings.

And the shacks slipped into Hamtramck's history.

approve the budget.

He added that the city asked the state to step in and "fix the problem, but didn't."

Councilmember Walters said that regardless of how the council feels about Square, it has to move forward.

"Do you want to end up like Highland Park?" he said. "If we dwell on the past we have no shot for the future."

Powell said that ultimately the state Transition Advisory Board approves the budget. But, she warned, state officials will take note of the council's refusal to adopt it.

"The last thing you want to do is show the state that we're not being cooperative," Powell said. "We need to show that we're cohesive."

Powell added that not adopting the budget will bring on "adverse consequences." Hassan said he has no problem dealing with the state. Councilmember Robert Zwolak suggested reducing a $20 fee on water bills to $5.

Powell replied: "So we should eat the cost?"

Zwolak questioned if the city will repair potholes in the alleys. Mark Ragsdale, the Director of Public Works, said the city's state-funded street repair fund can't be used for alleys.

Zwolak criticized the city for delaying pothole repairs. He said the public is blaming the council for this.

meeting in the vote to approve a new contract for pothole spray patch-Councilmember ing,

However, later in the Zwolak was the sole vote against it.

During the regular council meeting, Fire Chief Paul Wilk made a presentation on Fire Marshal Greg McBryar, who was retiring after 25 years of service.

"He made a difference," Wilk said, "Not only in the Fire Department but in my life."

McBryar thanked the Fire Department and the Mayor Karen Majewski said: "The city will be really hard-pressed in replacing your leadership." In the public comment portion of the meeting council candidate Saad Almasmari said the city needs to attract businesses in order to shore up the city budget.

"That's the only way to make the city better," he said. Bill Meyer noted that members of the public used to be allotted five minutes to speak and now it's limited to two minutes.

He said if the public were allowed more time to talk "maybe more people will attend the meetings."

He said the city needs to stop taking money away from people, allow more Muslims to serve in office since the city has a Muslim majority population and get a newspaper to cover the city.

He said the current that's called democracy. local paper is all opinions.

Later in the meeting Councilmember Walters agreed with Meyer about the local paper.

In the vote to adopt an amended budget a long discussion was held.

Councilmember Zwolak said that the procedure of creating the budget violated the city charter, which requires budget meetings. He was also critical of being presented with the budget "at the last minute."

City Manager Powell said if the council fails to adopt the budget state officials will not be pleased.

"It's very unwise to do something that's going to jeopardize this community," she said. "The last thing to do is raise the ire of the state."

In the vote to adopt the budget Councilmembers Miah, Zwolak and Hassan voted against it. Since Councilmember Musa was absent, the vote meant the budget failed to be adopted.

(In a special meeting held the next week, the budget was adopted.)

Councilmember Andrea complained Karpinski about having to repeat discussions held in the council's work session before the meeting because some councilmembers fail to attend them.

Councilmember Miah said the people have a right to know what the council discussed and the discussions should be held during the regular meeting. He said

Zwolak said the work sessions should be held in the council chamber and televised.
