Quick Hits

The Hamtramck Guerilla Road Repair crew will be back at it this Saturday (Aug. 8).

There is still a lot of media buzz about this merry band of volunteers who decided they couldn't wait any longer to take care of the city's many potholes. The volunteers decided to roll up their sleeves and tackle the problem head-on.

The group has been raising money to buy cold patch material and have been hitting the streets for the past few weeks filling potholes.

City officials weren't terribly pleased at first, but have since coordinated the effort with the group.

Volunteers will meet up at 10 a.m. at 11549 St. Aubin. From there, they will fan out. Last week about 40 folks showed up. The effort has gained the attraction of local media outlets, and we expect the coverage to continue.

Election day round-up: the highs and lows of a long day

By Charles Sercombe

The public schools' millage renewal and city council incumbents all got a thumbs up from voters.

The second time proved to be the charm for the school millage renewal, winning by a whopping 1,563 votes to 348 – an 82-percent approval from voters.

The millage was defeated last February in a special election.

Council incumbents Anam Miah, Robert Zwolak and Abu Musa finished in the top three and will face challengers Susan Dunn, Saad Al-masmari and Cathie Gordon.

Those knocked out of the primary were Monzurul Karim, Mohamed Al-somiri and Frank Woodman.

The November election will reduce the field of six candidates down to the final three, who will then go on to serve a four-year term on council.

Although Miah was the top vote-getter, the election was super tight. Miah finished just 21 votes from second-place finisher Zwolak and 93 votes from sixth-place finisher Gordon.

What that likely means is that anything can shift come the November election.

Note to candidates: There are no guarantees and you still have your work cut out.

The school millage result was perhaps the most surprising. Although supporters of the millage worked very hard in reaching out to voters, no one expected a slam dunk.

Schools Superintendent Tom Niczay credited that hard work from

In its 95th year, Kowalski Sausage has plenty to celebrate about

Hammered back into shape, bullet holes removed, and outlined anew with neon piping, the unmistakable sausage-shaped Kowalski sign will once again light the Hamtramck sky, and very soon.

“It means we're here, and we're going to be here,” said Michael

Kowalski, the President and CEO of Kowalski Company, Inc. “We've got 95 years in and we want to go another 95 years.”

In a way, the story of the unlit Kowalski sign reflects the state of the company over the past several years, a time in which Hamtramck's beloved sausage maker could've ended its near-

By Charles Sercombe

Hamtramck homeowners may want to start saving up some extra money during the next few months.

That's because the city's long-running – and seemingly never-ending – housing discrimination lawsuit is about to sock it to you.

The federal judge overseeing the lawsuit has agreed to add a special tax millage on this year's winter property taxes to pay for more housing construction.

The amount will total no less than $600,000 and if that isn't enough to cover upcoming construction costs, another tax millage will be tacked-on to the summer property tax bills next year.

It is not yet known what the final cost will be for homeowners.

And what does all this money get us?

The construction of two houses. The costs of a third house will be picked up by the state – if that makes you feel any better.

So how did this all come about?

In a recent motion, the attorney for the plaintiffs of the housing lawsuit insists that the city fell three houses short of the 200 housing units it was obligated to build.

That was news to city officials who had been under the impression that the housing lawsuit, now over 40 years old, had once-and-for-all been settled.

But no, Judge Damon Keith, the judge who has presided over the lawsuit

In its 95th year, Kowalski Sausage has plenty to celebrate about

century-long relationship with the city.

In 2002, Kowalski bought Home Style Foods and its plant on Edwin. The following year, Kowalski acquired Tasso's Epicurean Cuisine out of Novi. In 2011, Kowalski bought Hamtramck-based Dudek Foods. This year, Kowalski acquired Toledo-based Consumer Guild Foods.

Kowalski said the company had been considering consolidating all production into one plant, which most likely would have meant leaving Hamtramck. The decision to stay was brought about by customer demand for pre-packaged, pre-sliced lunchmeat.

"If you have a big customer waiting for it, you can't wait forever or they'll ask somebody else," Kowalski said. "Leaving has never been a pursuit of ours. The question was to consolidate or not."

Ultimately, the company decided to refurbish and expand its Holbrook plant and hire more employees in order to produce meat products for its retailers, which are no longer the Kowalski delis that used to dot the Metro Detroit area, but superstores like Kroger and Meijer.

"Most of the business will go to the sliced meat line, so we'll need new people and new equipment," Kowalski said.

Plus, with all of its recent acquisitions, the company slogan of "Kowality" no longer applies to meat products. Kowalski now produces 55 prepared food products, which include the pierogi and nalesniki formerly made by Dudek and twice-baked potatoes and the salad and dip product line formerly associated with Home Style Foods.

According to Kowalski, the company has had to adapt not only to market changes in Michigan but also to the many states where Kowalski products are now available, or where they will soon be available.

Kowalski Company plans to increase its distribution beyond its current areas throughout Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, West Virginia and Kentucky to include Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Pennsylvania. Products are available for on-line purchase throughout the 50 states.

"The business has always had to adapt over the years," Kowalski said. "As market and consumer needs changed, we've changed over time."

The company's founders, Agnes and Zygmund Kowalski, emigrated from Poland to America in the early 1900s and opened a small grocery store on Chene St. in Detroit. By 1920, demand for Kowalski products was great enough to warrant the opening of the factory on Holbrook.

The leadership of the Kowalski Sausage Company passed from generation to generation and Michael Kowalski, Corporate Secretary Linda Kowalski Jacob, and Audrey Kowalski, who left the company in 1994, inherited the company in 1989, after their father Ronald Kowalski died at the age of 49.

"Between the three of us, we had three years of experience," Kowalski said.

Still, the fourth generation of the family wants to maintain the company's strong commitment to Hamtramck and the metro-Detroit area. The decision to stay in Hamtramck will mean the hiring of 200 additional employees, mainly in Michigan, and $2 million in improvements to the Holbrook meat-processing plant.

"We have had many offers to sell the facility in Hamtramck, mostly from out-of-state companies, but have declined such offers because we want to stay where the roots are and give employment opportunities to those who live in the area," Kowalski said.

Greyhounds make great strides from last year

By Omar Thabet
Special to The Review

The 10-and-under Hamtramck Greyhounds baseball team finished this season in second place in the Detroit Police Athletic League (PAL). On Monday the Hamtramck Greyhounds went up against the Detroit Royals and lost to them in the championship game. But this year's team was a major turnaround compared to last year. Last season, the 10-and-under-baseball team finished in last place with a 1-12 record. This season, the team finished in second place with an 11-3 record. "The kids worked very hard to get to get to this point," said co-coach Adan Abdullah. "Most of the players on this team never picked up a baseball before this season. So to finish in second place out of ten teams is a huge accomplishment." The roster of the 2015 Hamtramck Greyhounds 10-and-under baseball team included: Adam Abdullah, Ali Abdullah, Aliyah Abdullah, Saif Al-masmary, Dominick Dockery, Jozef Dushaj, Mohamed Howaig, Sam Hussain, Montez Jones, MD Montashir Shah, Hamza Thabet, Yousif Thabet, Zackaria Thabet and Ameer Thomas. Editor's note: Review writer Omar Thabet was co-coach of the team. He had this to say about his team: "I can't stress enough how proud I am of this team. They faced tons of adversity throughout the season and dealt with it really well. They were in a bunch of close games and most of the time they came out on top.

"As a former player at this age it's great to see that baseball is still alive in this community. Especially at such a young age. So for all of you who are reading this, when you see one of the players walking around town be sure to congratulate them on their wonderful season. "They deserve the recognition, and a compliment can go a long way. We need to keep the future of sports running in Hamtramck, and it all starts with the younger ones."

City Hall Insider ...

What is our City Council up to these days?
We have the highlights of the latest council meeting.

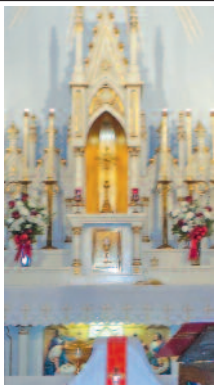

By Charles Sercombe
The city council met on July 28, and all councilmembers were present except for Anam Miah. Before the regular council meeting a work session was held. In the work session, Councilmember Robert Zwolak questioned when the position of police chief will be posted for candidates to apply for. City Manager Katrina Powell said she will post the position "as soon as I decide." (The Acting Police Chief is Anne Moise.) Zwolak questioned who put a resolution on the agenda in favor of the school millage proposal (which appeared on the Aug. 4 ballot).

Powell said she put it on the agenda on the request of school district Superintendent Tom Niczay. Two representatives from the Detroit Water Department made a presentation about a proposal to change the city's contract with Detroit to a newly-formed regional agency called the Great Lakes

Water Authority. The representatives said the name change will not result in a change to water and sewage rates. (Hamtramck pays $300,000 a month for water and sewage service.) Powell said that there are yearly increases in water and sewer service

A breakdown of how the votes added up in Tuesday’s election

By Charles Sercombe

The Aug. 4 Primary Election results had some surprises. Here are the unofficial results:

The school millage won with 1,563 votes in favor of it and 348 votes against the proposal.

In the city council race all incumbents – Anam Miah, Robert Zwolak and Abu Musa – survived.

The top six candidates in the city council race who will face-off in the November General Election are:

Anam Miah – 640 votes
Robert Zwolak – 619 votes
Abu Musa – 610 votes
Susan Dunn – 588 votes
Saad Almasmari – 566 votes
Cathie Gordon – 547 votes
The following three candidates did not make the cut:
Monzurul Karim – 463 votes
Mohamed Alsomiri – 436 votes
Frank Woodman – 422 votes

Election day round-up: the highs and lows of a long day

teachers, staffers, the school board and volunteers for the success of the millage.

He downplayed his own role, despite investing many hours into the campaign.

“I was just the passenger,” he said.

As far as election day went, you could not ask for a more pleasant day, weather-wise. The skies remained sunny and the temps were in the low 80s with little humidity.

Voter turnout went slow until about 5 p.m. when a steady stream of voters hit the precincts.

Once again, absentee ballots played a large roll. In the weeks leading up to the election a number of candidates zeroed in on getting supporters to vote early via absentee ballots. Some 872 ballots were issued, but only 669 were returned.

In total, 1,911 voters turned out.

A few tidbits we noticed on election day:

The preferred means of transportation for at least three candidates was by bike, which was a nice alternative to the number of candidates and their supporters tooling around town with their SUVs decked out in campaign signs.

And for a small town like Hamtramck, do you really need to drive around?

Don’t hold us to this, but possibly the oldest voter participating in the election was Beatrice Woods, who recently turned 90 years old. She has been voting in every election, she said, since 1945.

And she still insists on casting her ballot by going to the polls. For those who sat this election out, and there are about 8,000 of you who did, let that be a lesson in taking your constitutional right to vote seriously.

And speaking of civic duty, we saw several voters bring their kids in tow to the polls, which is always heartwarming to see. What a great way to instill the value of voting in the next generation.

For City Clerk August Gitschlag, election day is a long day indeed. He handles it pretty well, from what we saw, but he did seem to have one pet peeve: Folks passing out campaign literature stepping over the 100-foot boundary they legally had to stay behind from the precincts.

It’s one of those cases where you give someone an inch and they insist on taking a mile.

One tradition is still alive on election day: There are still some candidates and their supporters, and just those interested in the election, who hang out at city hall after the polls close to wait for election results.

It’s a chance for everyone to let their hair down and get to rub elbows with fellow residents.

Plus there is an adrenaline build-up to when results are handed out. Despite the ease of finding out results through online social networks, nothing beats being there in the middle of the action.

And speaking again of the nice weather, candidates and their supporters who will meet again in November might want to bottle these warm days. It’ll come in handy on election day.

A MARRIAGE AND FAMILY MOMENT

My dad's own father needed to survive after my dad's mother died of tuberculosis when he was only six months old in the farming town of Port Austin, Michigan - the tip of the thumb in Michigan's hand, or glove-shaped state. My parents drove old cars, struggled, failed and loved long.

The merged family, like so many households today, in Hamtramck, MI., and beyond, were forged and fueled by work, and, for my own parents, the farming chores of milking cows, raising chickens, and more. My mom, also, was part of a merged family in Cheboygan, MI., twenty miles south of the popular Mackinaw Island bridge that links the upper and lower peninsulas.

Respect, forgiveness, acceptance of spousal differences, and, reconciliation of power struggles with the many 'tired' times, alone, will see families PATIENTLY through WITH DEPENDENCE on the Maker. My family of nine knows the cost of hard work, relating well, and failing often to make family work. We all are blessed with the capacity inside ourselves to influence marriage and family beyond any need for a 'quick fix' in a throw-away society, or, the need for magic to transform each other, and, Hamtramck, MI., and, our world for that matter. Takes time. Lots. Love.

We never do enough to support family. Genesis of our Bible tells how God gladly formed precious family with care. Respect spouse, siblings.

Review: Opinion Page

In Our Opinion

Objecting to sewer repair costs is pointless

Like it or not, we are going to pay for sewer repairs.

There are certain people in town who are complaining that the city's repair project is too little, too late and that residents can't afford it.

The first of several phases in making sure our basements don't flood anymore will begin in the coming months.

This first step will cost about $6 million, and we will be paying through an added fee on our water bills.

It has not been calculated what that extra fee will be, but several months ago it was estimated to be $7 to $14 on each bill.

We are paying for the errors of residents from 60 years ago who refused to pay for an upgrade by voting it down.

No matter what you think of the cost of the project and how the city is going about it, we have no choice. The work is being forced on us by court order as a result of a class action lawsuit filed against the city a few years ago.

The lawsuit was filed by residents several years ago after one of the city's massive floodings.

As part of the agreement between the residents and the city, the city agreed to start making repairs to the sewer system.

Ironically, whatever paltry amount of money the plaintiffs of the case individually won, they will end up paying it back for repairs.

There is no turning back on this deal. The court has ordered it, and the city has to comply.

It is of no use to complain, unless you want to direct it at to those who had a chance to fix this problem once and for all back in the 1950s but were too stingy to do so.

But then again, that would accomplish nothing constructive.

Metro news ...

It's said that whatever happens to Detroit, so goes Hamtramck. Our friends over at model-media.com have been reporting on fascinating development projects for the past several years.

With their permission, here is an edited version of this week's story:

Seven placemaking projects, one for each city council district, are being given a boost by Community Development Advocates of Detroit. With the financial support of the Kresge Foundation, CDAD is spreading $42,000 across the city, granting the money to projects addressing the needs and challenges of their neighborhoods.

District 1: In Brightmoor, a house is being converted to provide meeting space for the community. Outside, a learning area will feature native plants, walking tours, and an outdoor seating area with a fire pit.

District 2: A portable artists tent is being installed in Palmer Park, where it's hoped that the addition will stimulate arts programming beyond the Palmer Park Arts Fair.

District 3: Renovations and improvements are planned for a pocket park on Keating Street near East State Fair in the Lindale Gardens neighborhood.

District 4: A mini-fitness park is to be built in an East English Village vacant lot, featuring stationary fitness equipment and a small track.

District 5: At the Peace Zone in District 5, improved seating and murals will be added to the existing area. It is part of the Peace Zones for Life project, which aims to counter neighborhood violence.

District 6: At Garage Cultural, a community arts hub at Livernois and Otis, enhancements to the pre-existing space include a mini-skate park, community stage, market, and outdoor movie area.

District 7: Littlefield Playfield in D7 will receive markers and sculptures acknowledging the neighborhood groups that work to maintain and improve the park.

Both CDAD and Kresge stress the importance of investing in the neighborhoods outside of the city core. CDAD executive director Sarida Scott says that it's projects like these that keep Detroit strong and vibrant. Bryan Hogle, Kresge Foundation program officer, agrees.

"For the city to succeed, neighborhoods have to succeed."

for these 40-plus years, and who is now in retirement, agreed that there are three more houses to go.

His ruling came as a shock to some city officials, but not to City Councilmember Robert Zwolak who predicted the judge would rule in favor of the plaintiff's attorney, Michael Barnhart.

Zwolak said he thinks the judge just wants the case to go away.

"He (Judge Keith) wants a quick and final solution," he said.

Barnhart has been representing the plaintiffs in the lawsuit for most of the past 40 years.

This lawsuit has become a financial boom for Barnhart. In a recent four-year period alone, he was paid over $900,000. It's anyone's guess how much he has amassed while he has been involved in the case.

Barnhart has refused to talk with The Review about the case.

That $900,000 in earnings was cited by the city's attorney, John Clark, in a motion against Barnhart's request for more money to build the additional housing arguing that amount of money could have paid for the housing.

But Barnhart counter-argued that because of the nature of this lawsuit and all its complexities and various agencies that have been involved, his earnings are justified.

According to media reports, Judge Keith agreed, but has ordered a financial audit of payments and monies that have gone toward this lawsuit and the construction of housing units. That audit is due in October.

Judge Keith also said he might withdraw from the case and let another judge handle it.

It was thought several years ago that the matter was finished. Judge Keith even came to a ribbon cutting ceremony at a housing unit built for the plaintiffs and stood with then-Gov. Jennifer Granholm for photos.

The event was meant to celebrate a final end to the historic lawsuit – which has now gone down in history as the longest standing housing discrimination lawsuit.

It all started in the 1960s when city leaders tapped into federal "urban renewal" funds to clear out blighted areas. Instead, they targeted mostly black neighborhoods, said the plaintiffs.

A discrimination lawsuit was filed but it went nowhere because there were no longer any federal funds to build new housing units, which the city agreed to do.

It wasn't until Wayne County and the state stepped in to help resolve the issue – and with an infusion of federal stimulus money – that the housing construction part of the puzzle was completed over the last several years.

Or so it was thought. Stay tuned, there will be more to follow on this matter.

rates, and there will be an increase starting with the August water bills. She did not say what that increase will be.

The name change, the representatives said, protects the agency in case the City of Detroit files for bankruptcy again. Later in the regular meeting the council agreed to sign up with the new agency.

Councilmember Zwolak noted that DTE Energy work crews installing new gas lines in the community cover up catch basins to prevent construction debris from falling in.

He said that the company's contractor performing pothole repairs, however, is not doing that. He said that is leading to debris piling up in the sewer lines.

In the regular council meeting, during the public comment section attorney Mark Koroj said he is supporting Councilmember Zwolak, Cathie Gordon and Mohamed Alsomiri in the Aug. 4 Primary Election.

Cathie Gordon said that since the city's upcoming sewer repair project is just a first step and not the final solution to flooding, she questioned if more lawsuits will be filed against the city as a result of future basement floodings.

Mary Urbanski complained about kids setting off bottle rockets in the streets, at 3 a.m., close to houses. She noted that many of the houses are 100 years old.

She also said that it was an "embarrassment" to see residents fixing potholes on television news reports.

"We are a laughing stock," she said.

Urbanski further complained that her street looks like "the surface of the moon" because it has so many potholes.

In the vote for support of the school millage proposal, all councilmembers voted in favor.

dents the opportunity to participate in new experiences and generate new interests. The summer program was available at the high school, middle school, and three elementary schools including Dickinson East running from June 22 to July 30.

This summer the main theme studied at Dickinson East was “Around the World.”

Students were transformed into anthropologists and studied various cultures from across the globe. They studied hieroglyphics from ancient Egypt, built tribal instruments from South Africa, wrote original stories, created aboriginal dot paintings from Australia, discovered the wonders of Greece and Italy, learned how to speak Japanese, and even decorated their own masks and held a carnival while studying Brazil.

Teambuilding and field trips were also frequent activities that took place over the six-week program.

Each day students began the afternoon with a task in which they must work together to accomplish a goal. The activities encouraged acceptance of one another, sparked new friendships, and taught students the importance of working as a unit. Field trips included Michigan’s
