Market study says Hamtramck is ripe for new housing

By Charles Sercombe

As many landlords know, Hamtramck housing is in high demand.

The demand is so great, a recent study performed for the city recommends building 10 new houses a year for the next five

A couple of weeks ago, Sharon Woods of LandUse USA talked to the city council for about 45 minutes about the study's findings.

The full report is over 300 pages long, and is available for public review. A shorter version is also available.

City retiree health plan will change

By Charles Sercombe

Retirees from the City of Hamtramck will see a change in their health coverage starting in Jan-

And some of them are upset, to say the least.

A few retirees, which include police officers, firefighters and city hall employees, have taken to social media, most no-Facebook, protest the changes, although no one has talked specifics.

The change comes from a court decision a few years ago, which ruled that the city can make changes to retirees' coverage.

A state Supreme Court ruling took it a step further, saying no community - this ruling includes Hamtramck – is obligated to offer retirees any kind of coverage.

There are over 200 retirees collecting a pension from the city.

The biggest change is that the city will no longer cover family members for free. However, spouses and children can be included, but the retirees will have to pay for their coverage.

Retirees who are eligible for Medicare will be covered for Medicare Advantage plan at no cost to them.

caught up to Jaczkowski, who lives in Hamtramck, by email, and she provided interesting answers to some questions about her past couple of years for our readership.

The Review: It's an ambitious thing to run any marathon. or marathon for that matter. How have you trained, and what have you done since your accident, to get you ready for this?

Amanda Jaczkowski: I'm in physical therapy four hours a week at Rehabilitation Institute of Michigan (RIM) at the DMC campus, and have been working with these trainers and therapists for over a vear now.

I ride my bicycle any chance I can get, play Pokemon Go, and go on long, long walks with my mom at Belle Isle a couple days a week. It has been a long journey - I was still using assisted walking devices until midwinter.

Review: What do you remember about the accident? Have you spoken can not only walk without with anyone since who helped you on that terrible day?

Jaczkowski: I remember thinking how beautiful of a day it was, and how excited I was that it was a Tuesday and I was going to get lunch with my cousin, and then also enjoy Taco Tuesday with friends after work. Missing Taco Tuesday became the long-standing joke of my hospitalization.

Aside from doctors, nurses, and medical students, I haven't spoken to anyone who helped me that day. I do have a very close relationship with one of the medical students (now a Resident), and two of the doctors who helped me early on. There are multiple nurses and PCAs (Patient Care Assistants) that I exchanged numbers with after I was discharged, so that I can keep them up to date on my progress.

Review: What were the biggest physical obstacles to get through in getting yourself back to relative health, to the point where you could undertake such a strenuous activity?

Jaczkowski: Well, I was bed-bound for over two months, and had even my non-injured muscles atrophy. I had extensive bone, skin, nerve, and circulatory damage. I lost over 10% of my body weight. Some things had to heal enough before fixing some other things, and simply building muscle mass back up has been a long journey.

What we really have been focusing on over the past year is core strength and my walking, so that I a limp, but also maintain that for a distance (it is nowhere near perfect, but the progress has been incredible).

Review: Out of all the things you could have chosen to try or do, why running a half marathon? Were you a runner before the accident? Was there something specific about the nature of this challenge that "called" to you?

Jaczkowski: I certainly was a runner before the accident.

I've never been one to sit still – you could always find me at the soccer field, running, riding my bicycle, dancing, or doing pretty much any other activity. I've done a plethora of 5k and 10k runs since high school, but in 2016 I trained and did the Detroit Free Press International Half Marathon.

I was signed up to do the CRIM in Flint and the Detroit Free Press Half Marathon again in 2017, but my accident prevented those from happening for me. I was volunteering at the Detroit Free Press Half Marathon last year, at the United Way for Southeastern Michigan water station, and watching the runners and walkers go by solidified my decision - I was going to do it again.

When I finally talked to one of my trainers and to my physical therapist at RIM, one of the trainers volunteered to accompany me. And so there we have it, a lofty goal and the means to accomplish it.

The Review: Is this a one-time thing, or do you plan to keep doing it if this goes to your liking? Or might you try other types of physical or mental challenges?

Jaczkowski: I've had all sorts of lofty, mildly absurd goals throughout my recovery.

I'm a capo (chant leader) for the Northern Guard, the independent supporter group for Detroit City FC. We stand on step ladders to lead the crowd, and so my December 2017 goal was, "I need to be able to stand on a step ladder for approximately 90 minutes straight by May."

My therapist was a little confused, but then I explained the context. She was still confused, but we created a plan of action, and then accomplished it.

I did a 5k in July 2018, shortly before the oneyear anniversary of the accident. My December 2018 goal was to be able to polka by March. And again, RIM therapists and trainers were (a little less confused, and) willing to make a working plan to get me to that goal.

The decision to do the Half Marathon is kind of coming full-circle for me, and is really the height of my recovery. It's really a closing of the loop – I had intended to do it in 2017, so it's just been deferred a bit. I don't think I'll do it again, but I won't say "never."

Review: What kind of support system have you had, in terms of family, friends or even pets, to help you in this journey?

Jaczkowski: There have been a lot of inspiring people in my life, but one of the biggest pushes to get better quickly was that in Hamtramck.

Hamtramck has long been known for its twofamily rental units. The city has also been a favored community to live in for Wayne State University students who can't afford housing near the campus.

Now, it appears, a number of young professional people are also being squeezed out of Detroit's midtown, where rents have gone up astronomi-

The study took a look at who is currently living here and the languages being spoken.

Much like the city's public school district, there are a variety of languages you can hear on the streets.

Most residents, almost 7,000 out of the estimated 22,000 people call Hamtramck home, speak English only. The next highest languages spoken are Arabic, coming in at 5,115; Bengali at 4,565; and Russian/Slavic at 2,700.

There are 12,650 residents here who were born in this country, while the remainder of the 22,000 people living here were born elsewhere.

City Manager Kathy Angerer praised the report, and said it will be an important tool for the city to use.

"This is one piece of our economic development plan," she said.

Angerer added that this was not to be a "stuffy study that will sit on the shelf."

City retiree health plan will change

the city is offering three options, which will all require the retirees to kick in money for coverage.

The city will contribute $134 monthly, the same amount paid each month for Medicare eligible retirees, toward any of those three options.

City Manager Kathy Angerer said that, although the court decision came down a couple of years ago, the then-City Manager, Katrina Powell, did not take action to reduce or eliminate benefits.

Angerer said it was not an easy decision for her, but said the change is necessary to help reduce costs to the city. The city won't know the total savings for sure until the new policy is in place.

Representatives for the four city employee unions were notified of the change, said Angerer.

Angerer is also enforcing a contract provision that says if retirees are eligible to receive health care coverage from another employer, they must take that option.

Retirees will be required to inform the city each year whether they are eligible for another health coverage plan. There are several retirees who went on to second and even third careers after retiring at a young age from the city.

Angerer noted that, while the changes may not be popular with pensioners, the city can no longer afford to provide previous coverage plans.

"The number one reason," she said, "is because of the state revenue-sharing cuts that were made."

Those cuts came when Rick Snyder was gover-

For many communities, that cut was financially devastating, and forced many cities to make drastic budget cuts.

Still, the change has angered a number of retirees and their spouses. On a Facebook page called "I Love Hamtramck," Susan Zarski Lorio, whose husband Andrew Lorio was a firefighter for 32 years, said the new plan is unfair to lives for the city.

"When they retired, they all signed contracts with the city that guaranteed their health care would, if not be better, at least never be less than they day they retired," Lorio said.

In Our Opinion

Study offers a plan to spur new housing

Hamtramck has long been home to newly-arrived immigrants.

For decades, Hamtramck has been identified as a Polish enclave. But in recent years, the city's ethnic makeup has greatly changed. Now, we have more immigrants from Bangladesh and Yemen.

We are about to get a new influx. Thanks to $1.2 million in federal funding, the city will become home for six refugee families.

The funds are paying for the construction of three brand-new two-family houses on Faber St.

Not only does Ham-tramck get to continue to be home to immigrants, we get a boost in new housing.

development That dovetails with a recent market study of the city's housing.

The upshot is, there is a huge demand for more rental dwellings. It was said that the city can sustain the building of 10 houses a year for five years.

The only trick is to get the owners of the city's numerous empty lots to make this investment. It's been a mystery to us why people purchase an empty lot and then just sit on it forever.

Yes, we know there are speculators waiting to cash in on some future development project. And they wait, and wait forever. In the meantime, a whole lot of empty land remains just that: Empty.

We now have a road map on how to proceed with housing development. The study cost nothing to the city, but its conclusions are priceless.

Now it's the city's turn to take action, and find ways to motivate these folks who don't want to take the initiative and invest in the community.

For this runner, not even a catastrophic accident can keep her down cont. from page 2

my grandma had been diagnosed with terminal cancer shortly after my accident and wasn't expected to make it until Christmas (2017). As soon as I was cleared to fly, I went down to Louisiana, and sure enough - she was waiting to make sure I was OK.

My family and friends definitely rallied around me. I had a lot of open skin, so was restricted to six visitors (my five immediate family members, plus a friend), who were all I saw in person for months. I had friends who would make signs (of course, about tacos) and stand outside the hospital so I could see them.

I had people across the world sending cards and words of well wishes one of the most notable was a signed card from the players at Glentoran FC, a team that had come from Northern Ireland to play DCFC a few years back. The soccer community (all over the US) came through solid. Basically, everyone I've ever come in contact with, even by degrees of separation, was pulling hard for me to recover.

Review: That's amazing. So, what is your connection to Hamtramck? Were you born here, or did you move here somewhere along the way?

Jaczkowski: My family came to the U.S. in the early 1900s, and was a part of the old Poletown community. We've had five generations have sacraments made at St. Hyacinth, right across I-94. When I was a kid, my grandparents still lived in Hamtramck.

I'm here with a lot with friends, some old family friends (Hi, Uncle Tony!), and activities. I always wanted to settle down here, and was actually in the process of buying a house when the accident happened. I finally bought a house here in 2018. and now love every minute of living in it.

Review: How did the accident impact you, in terms of the unfathomable bills that must have come from all the surgeries and so on? Are there, or were there, legal cases that might help (no details necessary)?

Jaczkowski: The fact that a bicycle is considered a road-legal vehicle and so the accident was covered under auto insurance really helped. This is one reason I have no problem with the no-fault and catastrophic fund, and I encourage people to look into how proposed changes would affect them.

I have never sat down and done the exact math, but the recent proposed caps ($250,000 per incident coverage) wouldn't have even gotten me through the first few weeks, much less through all of the remaining surgeries and therapy that I've undergone.

I encourage people to speak to victims of accidents that have caused life-long changes like mine has, and support having full PIP coverage without caps.

Review: Feel free to add anything else about yourself: your other inter- to register, or to find more ests (and how those are going), other background, etc.

Jaczkowski: Other than what I've already mentioned, I am a Master in Public Administration student at Wayne State University.

I also am the Michigan Charter Representative for The Saber Legion, which is the world's largest international "LED saber" ("LED saber" is the non-copyrighted, Disney-friendly word for "lightsaber") combat organization. While I am a leader in the area for that organization, it can be frustrating that I am not able to compete due to injuries. I am slowly working on my strength, and have started to take classes again in recent months.

Odds & Ends

By Alan Madlane

In the news... Michigan's animal lovers got a dose of the old good news/bad news this week.

On the heels of a statewide report showing that, overall, the state had reduced its levels of animal euthanasia enough to put it in very select national company, a host of other issues remain in the foreground.

According to the website of Lansing's WILX, Michigan has joined only Delaware as an "official No-Kill state," by virtue of statistics. It's made all the more impressive in that Delaware has only three shelters statewide, whereas Michigan boasts 174.

Deborah Schutt, cofounder and chair of the Michigan Pet Fund Alliance, said that, where once years ago the state put down around 10,000 unwanted pets per month, it euthanized only 13,000 total for the past year altogether.

But an unnamed receptionist at the Michigan Anti-Cruelty Society, who noted that he is also an attorney, when reached by phone this past Wednesday, was quick to point out a few things.

One, no new law has been passed; the "No-Kill State" thing is just a statistical line-drawing. Once a state has stats that show that 90 percent of the animals brought to them are either adopted back out, given temporary shelter or else returned to their owners, they get the designa-

The problem is, "returning pets to their owners" is usually nothing more than a euphemistic phrase for simply turning people away. Furthermore, such a designation can give people the thought that they now have free rein to ditch their pets. But: see the point above again. And people can get very bent out of shape when the shelter says they have "no room left at the inn."

Another question: what about animals that get taken in, but that no one wants to adopt? What is the quality of life for an animal, if it spends its whole life in a tiny cage, with only minimal positive human interaction from a few overworked and overtaxed shelter staffers? A trend relatively new to most cities is that of TNR, or trap-neuter-release. In this system, strays are brought in to shelter clinics, spayed or neutered, and released back into the wild to continue their lives.

But strays have it hard. Extremes of climate, dangers that accompany foraging for food, car traffic, mean people, spilled antifreeze, fights with other animals; the list of dangers is long, and means short, hard lives for a lot of strays.

The bottom line?

Don't get a pet if you can't afford it, in terms of money, time, vet bills, shots, and a willingness to forgive chewed shoes, scratched couches, and thrown-up-on (or worse) rugs.

A pet can, and often will, be the best friend you'll ever know, greeting you after every day with consistent love.

GM reportedly renews threat | UAW says GM is not budging in negotiations to close the Poletown plant

By Charles Sercombe

The future of the GM Poletown plant is once again up in the air.

According to a report this week by WXYX Channel 7, GM officials are now telling UAW strikers that GM will go ahead with its plan to close the plant, as well as one in Ohio.

GM recently offered, in its proposed contract terms with the union, to keep the plants open and shift production there.

A few months ago, GM had said those plants and two others would be closed.

The Poletown plant was originally scheduled to be closed this January.

There is speculation that this latest turn of events is just a ploy to settle the strike and get the union to agree to a new employment contract.

At this point, it appears contract negotiations have stalled. The strike is now in its fourth week. You can read more about the status of the strike on page X.

For Hamtramck, there is a lot at stake with the Poletown plant. Since a portion of the plant is on the Hamtramck side of the Detroit border, GM pays the city $800,000 a year in lieu of property taxes.

That loss of revenue to the city would be financially devastating.

In the meantime, Hamtramck officials are scrambling to figure out a way to keep the budget balanced, in the event that Poletown indeed closes.

By Alan Madlane covered by the proposal, GM initially proposed to

The UAW strike of GM seems to have taken a turn for the worse.

Of course, many times it looks that way, and then there comes a miraculous break-through.

In a statement from Terry Dittes, Vice President and Director of the UAW General Motors Department, he said contract negotiations have stalled.

The union submitted an extensive package proposal to GM last Saturday. Various issues were including major ones such wages, signing bonuses, job security, pensions, profit sharing, and more.

Dittes said GM made a counter-proposal that reverted back to their previous offer and in essence completely ignored the union's proposal.

Dittes warned the strike now may be a long one.

General Motors is also saying it will now go ahead and close the Poletown plant and another one in Ohio, both of which keep open in its original bargaining offer.

The Poletown closure would cripple the city's budget. GM pays Hamtramck $800,000 a year in lieu of property taxes.

Some say the company is dangling the idea of closing the two plants as a bargaining chip, something that's not sitting very well locally, where people's livelihoods and their city's financial stability hang in the balance or twist in the wind.

It looks like the UAW strike at GM could drag on for a while.

There are two to choose from: a longer daytime version, that includes a spin through the historic Elmwood Cemetery at Mt. Elliott and Lafayette; or a shorter version at (shudder) dusk. Both include plenty of creepy historical info and a stop either for coffee (jittery enough, thanks) or beer (yes please!), according to the democratic wishes of the group.

They also noted that all of their remaining 2019 tours this month are $5 off with online reservation through their website link wheelhousedetroit.com/to urs and the mention of the promo code "October." This includes planned tours through Corktown, Eastern Market, Southwest, and those focusing on the city's architecture or automotive heritage.

They also have specials on certain items of gear. Again - website.

Note lastly that their fall hours have kicked in, representing a change: their Hamtramck location (9401 Jos. Campau, west side between Poland and Florian) schedule stays constant at Tuesdays through Fridays, 1 p.m. to 7 p.m.; and Saturdays and Sundays, 11 a.m. 'til 5 p.m.; but their Cullen Plaza location in Detroit at 1340 E. Atwater (at Rivard, west end of the Riverwalk) is going to four days a week only, Monday, Friday and Saturday, 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. and Sunday, 11 a.m. to 5

Bottom line? You better get it in gear.

They don't (yet?) do sleigh rides.

New mural... Now here's a fun idea.

Tomorrow, Saturday Oct.12, from 1 to 5 p.m., why not head on down to Veterans Park to help beautify your city, and get creative doing it?

Meet with organizers at the Hamtramck Stadium parking lot where Dan St. dead-ends, and come dressed to do some bigtime art.

The idea is to paint the yellow garage located right there with a mural, one celebrating Hamtramck in all its colorfully diverse historical flavor. All positive ideas will be welcomed and considered.

Celebrate the future "Hamtramck Recreation District Park" with some art that could last forever, or at least until those pesky little graffiti defacers get at it.

Contact Rezaul Chowdhury at (313) 603-6789 or his email rezaul@globaldetroit.com. Or, you could visit the following website, mmlfoundation.org/hamtramck.

Either way, it should be a fun and inclusive afternoon brimming with civic pride.

Even if it rains.
