As you can see on the right side of this front page, Hamtramck School Board Vice President Maggie Srodek has resigned.

That means her seat is open, and the remaining school boardmembers will now decide who to appoint to fill her position.

Time is running out, though, to apply for the position.

Interested parties have until 11:59 p.m. tonight (Friday, July 10) to submit their applications.

The following is a public notice published last week in The Review that explains how to apply for the position:

Notice is hereby given that there is a vacancy on the Hamtramck Board of Education.

Renovation work begins at Hamtramck's baseball stadium

By Charles Sercombe

Hamtramck's historic baseball stadium is about to undergo a historic change.

Last week, contractors began tearing out the old turf and infield to make way for a brand-new field.

Work will also begin on making repairs to the stadium.

By perhaps fall, it will be a reborn stadium.

The stadium is considered historic because it is only one of five stadiums built specifically for the old Negro League Baseball.

It was built in 1930, and was home to the legendary Detroit Stars. This was at a time when African-Americans were not allowed to play in the whites-only Major League Baseball.

The color line, at least in modern times, was eventually broken in 1947 when the former Brooklyn Dodgers hired Jackie Robinson. The Boston Red Sox was the last team to integrate in 1959.

Top right: The field at Hamtramck Baseball Stadium is being replaced. Middle: Detroit Star player Norman "Turkey" Stearnes was one of many legendary players in the former Negro League. Bottom: Tom Derry of the Hamtramck Stadium Ground Crew.

The history and significance of Hamtramck's stadium had been lost for decades. It wasn't until several years ago that its importance was discovered.

Up to that time, various city officials had called for tearing the stadium down because it was dilapidated and had become an eyesore. Once its historical background was discovered, it became a whole new ball game.

wasted no time in applying for grants to fix up the stadium.

For the past few years, a volunteer group called the Hamtramck Stadium Ground Crew has been maintaining the field.

Old-timey baseball games – where the players play bare-handed – have been presented at the field. The stadium even received rock star attention last year, when Detroit rocker Jack White hosted a baseball game. He also donated $10,000 toward the stadium's renovation.

In the meantime, the grant seeking has been paying off. Money from donations, from the state of Michigan, and from various organizations has been steadily coming in.

There is hope for the city to win a multi-million-dollar grant from the Ralph C. Wilson, Jr. Foundation.

Tom Derry, who is part of the Ground Crew, summed up the expectations of many when he said on his Facebook page:

“Can't wait until we hear the umpire cry, 'Play ball!'”

Sausage Company on Jos. Campau, and recently opened a new market in Sterling Heights. Srodek also recently had a child.

At a special school board budget meeting on June 29, Srodek submitted her resignation, which became effective after that meeting.

She told the board that her decision didn't come easy.

“It pains me, but it is the right decision,”

Srodek said.

Srodek has seen the district through its most financially difficult times. At one point, the district struggled to address a $5 million budget deficit.

Through a number of cuts – including privatizing some jobs – the district bounced back, and now has an $11 million budget surplus.

Under Srodek, the district was also successful in getting voter approval for a bond to upgrade and repair schools.

The district is now also seeking another bond to continue with building improvements, as well as to build a new school.

Srodek had nothing but praise for the district, which has a student enrollment of over 3,000, and where over 20 languages and dialects are spoken.

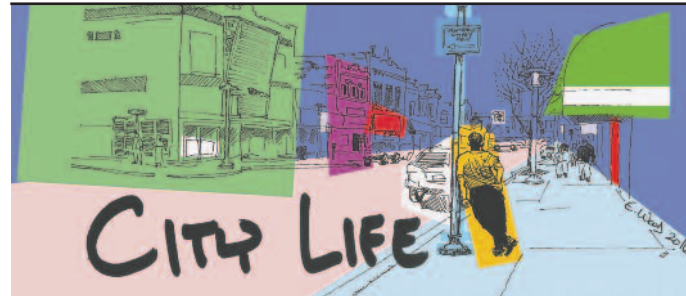

“It's a one-of-a-kind district,” she told her fellow boardmembers.

Her seat will now be filled by an appointment by the school board. The deadline for candidates to be considered for the appointment is today, Friday, July 10 at 11:59 p.m.

For those interested in the position, you must submit a letter of interest and a resume, by email to: jmcbryar@hamtramckschools.org

Interviews of candidates will begin next week.

Circle touring and quarantining on the road

By Walter Wasacz

Now going on 100 days of quarantine and social distancing, my restlessness and creativity have banded together in productive ways.

At roughly 60 days, I traveled with my Ohio-based companion Robin to her other home in California, with stops in the Grand Canyon, Joshua Tree, the beaches of the Pacific Ocean and Black Hills, South Dakota – where we saw Mt. Rushmore and the ongoing work to carve out a stone memorial to Native American icon Crazy Horse (begun by late Polish-American sculptor Korczak Ziolkowski, with continued progress on the project by his family).

In late June, we took a drive to see Robin's daughter, a JAG officer at the Great Lakes Naval Station on the north shore of metro Chicago.

Instead of heading there directly, we decided to do a circle tour of Lake Michigan, through the northwest side of the state across the bridge and into the Upper Peninsula, coming down the opposite shore in Wisconsin.

We stopped in Ludington the first night, then headed north through Manistee to M-22, the famous Michigan 'beauty road' that connects lovely lakeside towns like Frankfort, Glen Arbor, Leland, Northport and Suttons Bay.

We stopped at Sleeping Bear Dunes National Seashore for a rigorous hike to sandy hilltops overlooking the water.

The destination that night was Petoskey, where we spent a night at the state campground, watching the sky turn varying shades of red, blue and grey during a spectacular sunset that lasted well beyond 10 p.m.

The next day we backtracked to Walloon Lake, where a young Ernest Hemingway vacationed with his family in the early years of the 20th century, and explored the “Lord of the Rings”-like Mushroom Houses of Charlevoix, begun in 1919 by self-taught builder Earl Young.

We continued north on another gorgeous road, M-119, through Harbor Springs and the “Tunnel of Trees” to Cross Village and Legs Inn, established around 100 years ago through the combined efforts of Polish immigrant Stanley Smolak and Native American builders from the Ottawa tribe.

The building is considered a marvel of outsider art and quirky architecture, drawing curious visitors from all over the world.

After dinner in the inn's garden patio on a bluff overlooking the big lake, we rolled north over the Mackinac Bridge into the UP and made it to Tahquamenon Falls by dusk.

We viewed the larger Upper Falls (and the equally exquisite Lower Falls the next morning at sunrise) before heading west toward the Wisconsin border.

We stopped for lunch at a park in Escanaba, on Little Bay de Noc, then continued south to Green Bay for the night.

There, we took advantage of free bike rentals offered by our hotel (our only non-campground stay to this point) and cruised on the city's bike and walking trail that runs along the Fox River.

While on the trail I had thoughts about how Hamtramck can benefit from a network of interlaced trails, apart from the frustratingly delayed Joe Louis Greenway long earmarked for Jos. Campau. More on this in future columns.

We stopped in Sheboygan, a town on Lake Michigan, before landing in Lake Forest, where we spent the night at Robin's daughter's apartment.

We toured the naval base the next morning and afterwards walked in the commercial district of nearby Highland Park, Ill, where we found coffee and French pastry.

The last stop on our weeklong journey was back in Michigan, in Saugatuck, an arty resort town that was a bit too crowded for our comfort – we were masked in public throughout the seven-day trip – so we left to spend the night

Virus update: Governor considers walking back some openings

By Charles Sercombe

Well, that was fun – for some – while it lasted.

Gov. Gretchen Whitmer recently reversed her decision to allow people to go to bars.

That’s because soon after things opened up a bit, the coronavirus spiked up again. And no wonder. There were numerous reports of bar patrons standing shoulder-to-shoulder and not wearing masks.

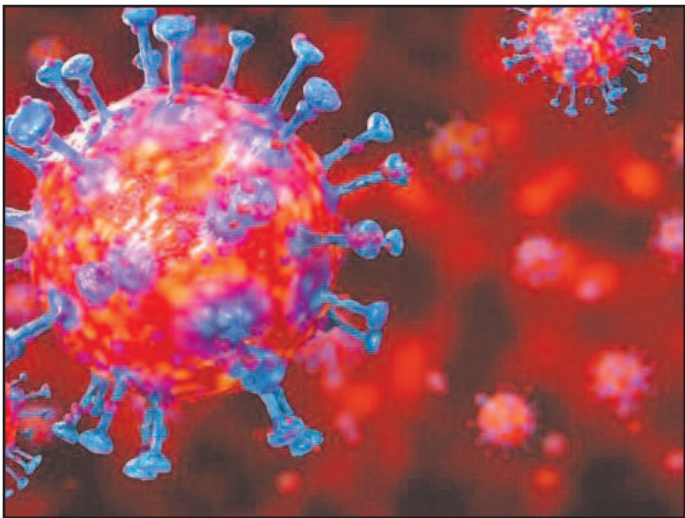

Although you now once again can’t drink inside bars, bars can serve you on outdoor patios and sidewalk cafes.

Indoor dining is still allowed, but Whitmer has said this week that, if the virus cases continue to increase, she may walk back some of the other businesses that were also allowed to open.

Whitmer addressed the issue in an interview with CNN.

“In so far that we have reengaged hair salons – that’s something that if we see some outbreaks, we may have to disengage on that front.

“I took a lot of heat. When we brought that curve down, we saved thousands of lives. I’m prepared to take heat if that’s what it’s going to take to keep people safe.

“We’re going to continue to monitor the numbers. If they keep moving up, we’re going to dial back if we have to. And it’s the last thing any of us wants.”

Last week, Whitmer took further action to help bars. If you have a bar or restaurant that makes your favorite drink, you can now get cocktails to go.

Cities can also create “social districts” where people can drink out in the open in designated areas.

A group of bars and restaurants can now enjoy one common outdoor area and sell drinks to folks.

Hamtramck could do this in any of the city parking lots. For example, part of the city parking lot between Polonia and Polish Village Café could be sectioned off.

Whitmer is also tapping into $880 million in federal funding to help businesses, front line workers and other areas to survive financially during the pandemic.

The following is list of money designation, or actions taken:

- A $2/hour increase for direct care workers;
- $125 million in grant funding to reduce the cost of child care for families;

- $100 million for hazard pay for local first responders and $200 million for local units of government;
- $100 million in small business re-start grants;
- $60 million in rental assistance and eviction diversion;
- $25 million for wireless hotspots and enhanced connectivity;
- $18 million for health and safety grants for schools;
- $10 million in MIOSHA grants for protections to keep workers safe on the job;
- and $14 million for food banks and domestic violence shelters.

Statistic-wise, here are the latest numbers on COVID-19, the disease caused by the coronavirus, as of Thursday when The Review went to press:

Statewide, there have been 67,237 cases and 6,015 deaths from the disease.

In Hamtramck, there have been 195 cases, with 22 deaths.

Governor proposes reforms for police officers

By Charles Sercombe

If Gov. Gretchen Whitmer had her way, police officers would no longer be allowed to use choke holds.

Recently, Whitmer released a number of proposals for police reforms.

Her proposals will have to be voted on by the state legislature, which is now Republican-controlled.

Her proposals includes to:

- Further limit the use of no-knock warrants.
- Require "duty to intervene" policies.

- Classify false, racially-motivated 911 calls as a hate crime.

- Require in-service training for all licensed law enforcement officers to maintain licensure.

- Authorize the Michigan Commission on Law Enforcement Standards (MCOLES) to do the following:

- Audit law enforcement agencies to ensure they are accurately reporting violations of law or improper use of force.

- Establish penalties for agencies who don't comply with reporting.

- Direct the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services Mental Health Diversion Council to make recommendations on best practices and training for police departments when responding to situations involving persons with mental illnesses.

"All Michiganders, no matter their community or the color of their skin, deserve equal treatment under the law," Governor Whitmer said in a press release. "This proposal will help us ensure that law enforcement officials treat all Michiganders with humanity and respect, and will help us keep our communities safe. I will continue working with leaders in law enforcement to make public safety more just and equitable in Michigan."

Whitmer also wants to take a few more steps in reforming policing and make departments "more empathetic."

- Provide incentive programs for law enforcement agencies to hire/retain officers who live where they work.

- Require retention of disciplinary records resulting from violations of law or improper use of force.

In the past, the Hamtramck Police Department has come under criticism and even lawsuits accusing some officers of harassing minorities.

A few months ago, City Manager Kathy Angerer hired a liaison between the department and the public, former Police Chief Max Garbarino.

His new title is now Director of Community Safety and Services. Garbarino said he approved of Whitmer's proposals.

"We are heading in a good direction as a state," Garbarino said. "I especially like that the governor is taking advice from both professional law enforcement and civil rights specialists. It should provide a well-balanced direction for improvement."
