We wish you a happy Thanksgiving

By Charles Sercombe

Next week is a special week for many families.

Thursday is Thanksgiving Day - a day for families to gather and give thanks.

For The Review, this coming week means we have to adjust our schedules.

That means that, if you want to place an advertisement, it must get to us by no later than Tuesday morning and even that is pushing it.

To submit an advertisement, you can call (313) 874-2100, or email us at news@thehamtramckreview.com.

Having said that, all of us at The Review thank you for being part of our family and supporting us throughout these many years.

Thanksgiving week is a time for all of us to appreciate our families and friends, and it also gives us the space to reflect on our lives and take stock of what's important.

And, the key things that are important are our health and taking care of our family and friends.

Have a restful week readers.

— HAMTRAMCK'S NEWSPAPER OF RECORD — HPS board president takes a deep

By Charles Sercombe

Following a recent raucous school board meeting regarding student reading material, Board President Salah Hadwan says he is conducting his own investigation.

The Hamtramck Public School Board is the latest board of education to come under scrutiny over what some say are inappropriate books on sexual and gender issues.

In total, there appear to be just two books in question in the HPS District, and it was pointed out that they were never required reading and, in fact, no student had even cracked them open.

Hadwan announced on Facebook that he is investigating what books are available in the district's

"Some of you asked me to verify these concerns by going to the libraries to check for any other sexually explicit books that might be inappropriate for minors in our schools," Hadwan said.

Hadwan went on to say he found one book that he objected to, but he did not identify it.

The reaction to Hadwan's investigation on var-Hamtramck-based ious Facebook pages was mixed, with some praising him and others questioning this approach.

City's State Rep. rises in legislature means That Gretchen Whitmer, also a Democrat, will have a much-more cooperative legislature to work with.

The Democratic majority in the state legislature also means a change in leadership in both the House and Senate.

Hamtramck's own State Rep. Abraham Aiyash was chosen by his colleagues to be the House majority floor leader.

It will be his job to coordinate and schedule legislative plans, as well as keep taking the pulse on what his party members think about the issues being considered.

Aiyash is the first Muslim to hold this position. This is Aiyash's second term. He ran in a newly drawn district, District 9, and won decisively over his Republican challeng-

The Review reached out to Aiyash for comment, but he did not reply.

Aiyash represents the growing political power of Muslims in Hamtramck, who now also control Hamtramck's government. The city had been a Polish enclave for several generations.

The city's Muslim community also captured another first by electing a Yemeni-American as mayor - who ousted former Mayor Karen Majewski in her re-election bid last

Some residents are complaining that the city's contractor for ambulance service, Rapid Response, is neither rapid nor responsive.

There is another Hamtramck connection to the position of Democratic House floor majority leader: former City Manager Kathy Angerer was the first female to hold that position - although, at the time she was in the state legislature, she did not represent a district that included Hamtramck.

City mulls over what to do about its ambulance service most traumatizing for us all was what happened next."

And that was watching "the clock tick by minute-after-minute" and no ambulance arriving.

Later, he found out that the reason for the delay was that the city has only one ambulance on duty.

"This was such a shocking and unacceptable fact that it is beyond belief ..." he said.

A student echoed his sentiment: "We need to ensure no lives are lost."

In the case of the school incident, the city's sole ambulance was tied up on another run. As it turned out, the city's ambulance contractor supplies only one on-duty ambulance during what are considered nonpeak hours. The city has had a bit of a tortured history with ambulance service. At one time, the Hamtramck

Fire Department operated that service. But, several years ago, the department's oneand-only ambulance died on a run, and police officers had to transport a person waiting for help to the hospital.

That incident prompted city officials to look into a less expensive ambulance service – while possibly improving upon it. The thinking was, by contracting out the service, the city would save money on both fire department staffing and the purchase and maintenance of a city-owned ambulance.

Initially, the city's contractors provided the service at no cost to the city. The companies thought they could collect insurance money from the people they service.

Turns out, though, a number of residents have no insurance.

The result was, the ambulance contractors were not earning money. Ambulance companies came and went. A few years ago, the company demanded and got- $140,000 a year for their service. Former City Managcity's current ambulance

er Kathy Angerer was in talks with the Hamtramck firefighters' union about possibly bringing back service to the fire department.

And then she left to take another job, and the matter has since, apparently, gone nowhere.

But even if the city were to return local service to the fire department, that comes with a price tag too, and that could possibly be more expensive than contracting it out.

Once you total up the cost of ambulance personnel and the cost and maintenance of an ambulance, it could all greatly exceed the $140,000 price the city currently pays.

The cost of a new ambulance alone is at least $200,000 – more or less.

And firefighters' union president Andrew Oleksiak conceded, on a recent Facebook page dedicated to Hamtramck, that it would take time to order and receive a new ambulance.

"If we ordered a new ambulance tomorrow, it could take up to two years to get because of demand and supply shortages," Oleksiak said.

Also, he said, there's a shortage of personnel.

"There's a massive firefighter/EMT/paramedic shortage in Michigan," he

As for the city eliminating ambulance service through the fire department, Oleksiak has another take on that.

"The fire department provided amazing service, but the city administration wanted to play political games with it and now this is the result," Oleksiak said.

If the city were to go back to providing its own ambulance service, there's still the matter of what happens when the city's ambulance is on a call and another call comes in?

Would that require the city to pay to have a private company on standby, just in case?

Or would the city also purchase a second ambulance and hire more trained personnel to be on hand?

The cost of that could be staggering, and the city is currently in deficient spending.

As of now, the city is talking with its contractor to provide a second ambulance during non-peak

In the meantime, Mayor Amer Ghalib has suggested hiring a specialist to help the city sort through this issue.

Healthy smiles can lead to healthy lives: understanding the importance of dental health

By Gregory E Berger, MD, Medical Director, CCA Health Michigan

ental and oral care are essential to overall health. Regular visits to a dentist for cleanings, checkups, and preventative care can help promote oral and dental health—and minimize problems that could affect the whole body.

Dental care, however, often gets overlooked. For many people, access and cost are two common barriers. In fact, more than 1 million Michiganders lack access to adequate dental care and almost half of adults age 65 and older lack dental coverage, a University of Michigan survey found.

Good oral health can be achieved through preventive care, regular self-care, and the early detection, treatment, and management of diseases. A healthy mouth, teeth, and gums are important to whole-body health. Oral health can be a window into overall health.

On the flip side, poor oral health can spark a cascade of adverse effects that can impact the rest of the body. For example, bacterial accumulation in the mouth can cause inflammation. Untreated, this can lead to gingivitis and gum disease, which have been shown to trigger whole-body inflammation. This systemic inflammation is linked to several diseases such as heart disease, pregnancy complications, respiratory diseases, and diabetes. New emerging evidence also links uncontrolled periodontal disease to an increase in respiratory complications from COVID-19.

Clearly, no Michigander should go without dental care. In addition to good personal dental hygiene practice—such as regular twice-daily brushing, flossing, and consuming food and drinks low in sugar and acids—regular dental checkups are also important to maintaining good oral health. While most plans cover basic dental care, individuals should determine whether their plans cover other services and procedures. This is essential for seniors as many of them may face gaps in coverage because original Medicare doesn't cover most dental services and many dentists don't participate in Medicaid programs.

At the same time, individuals who do have insurance coverage may face additional barriers. An important first step in addressing this challenge is recognizing that for many individuals, access to care involves a constellation of different but related hurdles, such as limited financial means, lack of transportation, busy schedules, or even fear or dislike of dental care services.

These are systemic, whole-health challenges that require any sustainable solution to prioritize unmet social and behavioral health needs. Individuals with significant challenges require complex and coordinated care. Legislators on both sides of the aisle are taking important steps toward aligning policies to include access to more comprehensive care, including dental and oral care.

Part of the systemic changes in access to dental care in Michigan is reflected in the growth of dental services available in the state via Medicare Advantage plans. In fact, at CCA Health Michigan, we offer low or no cost dental care to all of our Medicare members, because we understand how these services can positively impact long-term health and well-being. As our members and their teeth age, the need for these services will become even more critical.

For Michigan, the pieces to improving oral and dental health and wellbeing are already in place. Together, we can build a bridge to high quality, convenient dental care so the more than 1 million Michiganders who struggle to see a dentist will have something to smile about.

Review: Opinion Page

In Our Opinion

What is the hidden agenda of school books?

There has been a lot of attention lately about reading materials in our public schools.

Quite frankly, it's been a lot of loud ignorant talk and threatening language, used against school folks.

This issue is largely being ginned up by certain political forces whose hidden agenda is getting rid of public education.

In Hamtramck, there appear to be two books in question - that were never required reading and, in fact, had not been picked up by any student.

Let's take a step back on this issue, and take a few deep breaths.

Of course, parents' input on our education system is always welcome. But, we all need to come at the subject of education from an informed point of view not some knee-jerk reactions to what has become hysteria over sex-oriented subjects.

No one in our schools is trying to sexualize, or groom, or whatever buzz word you want to use, our kids.

Out of this heated debate, we heard one voice worth repeating.

And that person suggested that parents turn their attention to what their kids are looking at in their cell phones.

In other words, a lot of students are getting their sex education from the internet. Obviously, that's not the most trusted or healthy source to learn about such a thing, or frankly much of anything else.

What our kids are seeing on their phones is way more important than a few controversial books.

Parental control starts at home.

dds & Ends

Crime watch... Hamtramck's streets continue to show a mean streak.

Last week, there was a reported carjacking that involved three gun shots being fired. No injuries were reported, nor further details provided.

Just a couple of weeks ago, there were three reported armed robberiers on city streets. Two suspects have been arrested in that matter, and they face serious felony charges.

One of those suspects had just recently been released from prison.

Also, last week, the police department reported that officers noticed a person on Carpenter who was armed with a gun. The suspect ran off, but was later captured.

The department doesn't say where the arrest took place, but did say that a number of weapons were confiscated at the site.

We know that teens will be teens, and they have a lot of energy to burn off. Having said that, there have been consistent reports in recent weeks of disorderly juveniles, and even fights.

We also know that some folks can be pretty cranky and are generally annoyed by loud teens, so there's that to consider.

Moving on: what's with the ongoing reports of people banging on the doors of houses?

It could be any number of things, including doorto-door solicitors, political campaigners, disoriented folks, and of course, those wishing to cause harm or so they can break in.

The police department has long urged residents not to hesitate in reporting suspicious situations and that includes people and even, yes, vehicles.

Also, every week, there's at least one or two reports of people breaking into cars to steal items. For those not wise to the ways of living defensively in urban cities, heed this advice: Do not, and we mean never, leave anything of value in a car where it is in plain sight, whether the value is real or perceived, because someone will be interested in taking it.

That includes change in a cup holder, a pack of cigarettes, food, CDs, packages, tools, briefcases, clothing - you name it.

follow-up... Election For those wondering how many Hamtramckans voted by absentee ballot in the Nov. 8 election, that number was 1,893.

A total of 4,310 people participated in the election.

Recycle... Got a problem with a build-up of old electronic items in your home?

Yeah, us neither, but some folks might, and the solution for them is coming up this Saturday – and it's a great one.

The Detroit Zoo is hosting an E-Recycling Event that day, from 10am-4pm (the hours that the zoo is open).

The idea is to divert this toxic waste away from local landfills.

People who bring these items in for recycling will get a complimentary admission ticket to the Deto see if anyone is home troit Zoo. Extra tickets will be provided for those who carpool.

The tickets are good through the last day of the year, December 31. Check the zoo's website for visiting dates and times.

Pre-registering for this E-Recycling Event is encouraged, but walk-ups are welcome.

So, what kind of stuff, exactly, are we talking about here?

Items that may be recycled are: TV's and monitors; printers, desktop and laptop computers; cell phones and tablets; holiday lights, cords and other wires; DVD and VHS players; batteries; and radios.

The Zoo asks that you "cover," (i.e. -presumably wrap) all lithium batteries, button-type cell batteries, sealed lead-acid batteries. any batteries greater than 9 volts, or "batteries of unknown chemical composition," although they don't specify what you should cover/wrap these battery types in.

They also recommend that you remove all of your personal information from the electronic devices before bringing them up.

In other words, scrub them clean down to the studs. Although, they also assert that all hard drives brought in will then be destroyed in accordance with the standards set by the U.S. Department of Defense for such action. A certificate, attesting to the fact that this was, indeed, accomplished, can be emailed to you upon your request.

So, just bring your items to the Zoo's 10 Mile Road Large Surface (Parking) Lot, at 8450 W. 10 Mile Rd, Royal Oak.

Other questions can be emailed to sustainability@ DZS.org.

By Abdullah Hafid

My journey as a Preventive Medicine resident and Public Health student at Wayne State University Department of Family Medicine and Public Health Sciences has been eye-opening, captivating, and insightful.

Through these efforts, I have come to know the City of Hamtramck, in a close and informative way. While I was initially presented with the topic of lead contamination in households, this issue began to resonate with me through different assessments and community projects.

As a reminder lead is a heavy metal that has been used historically in plumbing fixtures, welding solder, and pipe fittings and is well-documented to cause learning delays, behavioral problems, and neurological damage. While this issue is not new to the community and the solution is known, the hazard remains.

This is important because having a lead service line presents a risk of lead poising in the Hamtramck community, as the maximum contaminant level goal for lead in drinking water is currently set at zero parts per bil-

As of last year, Hamtramck officials had estimated that 5,900 lead lines exist within the city. The US national average for swapping out a lead-service line for a copper service line is roughly $8,111 per line. That presents a replacement cost of $47.8 mil-

To fund this endeavor, The Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act provide billions of dollars nationwide to help address issue such as lead-service lines.

What makes this an opportune time for Hamtramck includes: an unthat is affected, evidence of recent contamination, and political leadership supportive of addressing this issue are all positive factors to get this resolved.

Thus, there is encouragement for local lawmakers to apply for individualization funds that the City of Hamtramck qualifies for to increase the process of replacing lead lines as quickly as possible.

The Look...

By Suraj Bhamra

Idling at a traffic light in the middle of rush hour traffic on Gratiot Ave right off I-94, everything looks a bit grimmer through the rain and snow mix collecting on the windshield.

The feeling of the late fall sun replaced with the sound of windshield wipers and the frozen silence of winter.

Worse is the feeling of being squeezed between the thumb of one deadline and the finger of another, the vehicle of life stalled on the side of the highway.

If you could just get a glimpse past the windshield, I think you would see that I'm a lot like you.

City Hall Insider ...

What is our City Council up to these days? We have the highlights of the latest council meeting.

By Charles Sercombe

The city council met on Oct. 11, and all councilmembers were in attendance.

Democratic Congressional candidate Shri Thanedar introduced himself to the council and communi-

"I will be here for the city," he said. "Let us work together to make this an even greater city."

He was given a certificate of appreciation.

Thanedar went on to win his election. His district includes Hamtramck.

Andrew Robinson, who is president of city hall's union members (AFSCME Local 666), praised the union's new contract with the city.

"It will stop the revolving door," he said, of city employees resigning to take other jobs.

The new contract was later approved by the council, and it creates two new additional positions for union members.

The three-year contract also calls for a 6-percent salary increase for each year.

City Manager Max Garbarino said the city's AFSCME workers are the "most important asset" of the city.

A resident, referring to the proposed resolutions that excused the past absences of Councilmember Mohammed Hassan and Adam Albarmaki, admonished the two members.

"We voted for you to be here," the resident said. "We need you here."

He added that the public is "watching."

The council later agreed to table the resolutions.

After a few months'of negotiations, the council agreed to allow the Hamtramck Public Library to handle its own accounting and banking services. The library is still owned by the city.

The council canceled its Nov. 8 regular meeting because of the General Election held that day.

Hennessey Engineers was hired to conduct an investigation of 119 randomly selected water service lines throughout the city. The cost for this survey is about $8,000, which is being covered by a state grant of over $118,000.

In another study, the council approved a grant application by the city and Eastern Michigan University to look at transportation issues facing the city.

Specifically, the study will focus on the community that was cut off by the creation of I-75.

In a letter to the state's Department of Transportation, the city said:

"Based on the 2020 Census, harmful historic transportation and housing policies have led to displacement and segregation of over 80% population of racial/ethnic minorities in the northwest corner of the city of Hamtramck by Chrysler Freeway (I-75), as a result, creating socioeconomic disparities and increasing environmental burdens and risks.

"This proposed project is to address these transportation and mobility disparities of the underserved and economically disadvantaged community of northwest Hamtramck.

cut off from the core of the city by I-75, by closing the chasm between transportation and displaced communities and creating new opportunities for all."

In a follow-up, the council updated the city's code requirement on the maximum length of grass allowed for residences. The city had been issuing tickets to households that allow their grass to get five inches or longer.

The council changed that to seven inches and longer.

The change was made at the behest of Councilmember Nayeem Choudhury, who said that grass at five inches of length "is not real long."

In another follow-up, the council decided to create a subcommittee to come up with requirements for the next city manager.

That subcommittee consists of Councilmembers Choudhury, Mohammed Alsomiri and Amanda Jaczkowski.
